HAPPINESS IS DAD COMING HOME

The sons of Danny Zohar don't often get the opportunity to see their dad these days. So when he came home on a 24-hour leave from the Israel army, they gave him a long and very affectionate welcome. Zohar and his family live in a kibbutz in northern Israel. (El-Baz)

Significant step gives major communities top assistance in planning their budgets

By MARK MEDICOFF
CJN Quebec Bureau Chief

MONTREAL – A national organization recently founded to assist 11 major Jewish communities in Canada to improve their budgeting process will hold its first series of sessions in Montreal later this month.

A significant innovation in the Canadian Jewish scene, the National Budgeting Conference (NBC) will serve as an instrument for accountability of the fiscal and program objectives and efficiency of all organizational programs conducted by and for Canadian Jewry.

Said Charles Bronfman, the organization's first president: "We hope to develop a more realistic understanding of needs at the national level. The meetings will provide us with an opportunity to compare notes . . . to decide what priorities are seen by each community.

"Also, the NBC can attempt to eliminate duplication, and be more efficient in the spending of contributors' dollars," he added.

The NBC is a joint activity of its members, which now include -- but may be expanded -- Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Ottawa, Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Hamilton, Windsor, and London.

National agencies involved in the NBC include the Canadian Jewish Congress, United Jewish Relief Agencies, Jewish Immigrant Aid Services, United Israel Appeal and the United Jewish Appeal of Canada.

The most important implication of the NBC is that national fund spending organizations can get approval of their budgets as a result of representations to the broad NBC.

A perspective on the national level will enable communities to share financial information, and spell out the needs and priorities for Canadian Jewry.

Some two dozen community leaders have studied the operations of the participating organizations in preparation for the September sessions which will, it is hoped, improve budgeting of communal funds.

According to Bronfman, who is also president of Allied Jewish Community Services, "budgeting really means programing." He is also concerned with maintaining the democratic element of the NBC, which will be as encompassing and pervasive as possible.

Bronfman deeply feels that the fund spenders are merely custodians of public money, and as a result, they have important obligations in deciding programing.

The first subcommittee meeting of the autumn period will be held on Sept. 23 at Cummings House, the AJCS building, and will be chaired by David Satok of Toronto.

Discussions will centre around the budgets of local communities.

A second meeting at Congress headquarters a day later will discuss Congress and UJRA. It will be chaired by Norman Zagerman of Ottawa.

Ford gives Rabin pledge of continued military aid

WASHINGTON (JTA) – President Gerald Ford has assured Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin that the United States will continue its ongoing military relationship with Israel.

(From other sources it was learned that the U.S. has agreed to replenish Israel's military needs at an accelerated pace, in recognition of the fact that the Soviet Union has been pouring military hardware into Syria and Egypt.)

Rabin, who returned to Israel this week after his visit to Washington, voiced satisfaction with the outcome of his talks with President Ford and Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. It is believed Israel will get virtually all she asked for in the way of armaments, including 50 Phantom jet fighter-bombers, 200 M-60 Patton battle tanks and other items, including laser-guided bombs.

President Ford pledged continuing support for Israel in welcoming Rabin to Washington. He described Rabin as "the leader of a great country," and drew applause when he declared, "we shall continue to stand with the state of Israel . . . we are committed to Israel's survival and security.

Britain's Centurion tank may become part of Israel's military equipment, if a report from London is to be believed. British foreign office spokesmen refused to comment when asked about a Sunday Telegraph article which said 400 Centurions were being refitted and rearmed in Israeli factories.

Continue talks with NRP

JERUSALEM (JTA) – Premier Yitzhak Rabin has received a mandate from the Labor Party Bureau and its Knesset faction to continue talks with the National Religious Party with a view to having it join the coalition government. Rabin asked for the mandate since the understanding was that if the NRP did not join the government within 90 days after the government was formed, their portfolios -- interior, welfare and religious affairs -- would be distributed among other members of the coalition.

Addressing the first session of the Bureau and its Knesset faction, Rabin said the party centre decided in the past that efforts should be made to include the NRP in the Cabinet. He said the basis for the NRP's entry should be the establishment of a ministerial conversion committee which would find a settlement on the basis "of the present coalition agreement guidelines." As long as that committee continues to function, no conversions would be registered in the official registry, Rabin said, adding this arrangement would concern conversions only from western countries.

This compromise formula would freeze for one year the registration of immigrant converts as Jews in the population registry. Presumably within the year, an acceptable solution would be found in connection with Orthodox demands that the Law of Return to amended to specify that only conversions according to Halacha are admissable in Israel. The NRP is under threat of a ban by the Chief Rabbinate if it joins the government without a commitment to amend the law.

The Chief Rabbinate has not disclosed its position on the compromise under discussion and the NRP is sharply divided. Leaders of the "Young Guard" in the NRP's Knesset faction are absolutely opposed to it and have received support from the veteran former Religious Affairs Minister Zerach Warhaftig. But NRP Secretary General Zvi Bernstein claimed that a majority of the party favored the compromise. He said he would convene the NRP's top policy-making bodies for a final decision if Labor makes a formal approach.

Meanwhile, the staunchly secular Civil Rights Party headed by Minister-Without-Portfolio Shulamit Aloni has warned that it would bolt the coalition if the NRP joined. Ms. Aloni said that the compromise would create a class of citizens in Israel deprived of the right to be registered as Jews. Several days ago she demanded that Rabin name her as Minister of Interior, a post traditionally held by the NRP. Her demand was based on the fact that the 90-day period has elapsed. The post is important to the NRP because that ministry registers new immigrants and thus decides who should be listed as a Jew.

Mapam and the Independent Liberal Party believe they can live with the compromise as it would not alter the religious status quo and feel that with the NRP in the government pressure would ease for the establishment of a national unity regime embracing Likud. Mapam and the ILP feel that a national government with Likud is a greater danger than the religious status quo because Likud would paralyze foreign policy making. The ILP is also reportedly worried that if CRP defects from the government on grounds of principle it would attract many secular voters away from the liberal faction.

Likely to be deported

Archbishop wants to make deal

JERUSALEM (JCNS) – Archbishop Hilarion Capucci, indicted on charges which include gun-running for El Fatah, the Arab terrorist group, is expected to try to reach an agreement with the prosecution in order to shorten the legal proceedings against him and facilitate his deportation at an early date. This was stated by Church circles describing the tactics likely to be adopted by the Archbishop's lawyer, Aziz Shehadeh, of Ramallah.

The Archbishop, who is the Greek Catholic Patriarchal Vicar for East Jerusalem and the West Bank, was arrested last month on his return from one of his frequent visits to Lebanon.

The counts in the indictment against him include transporting and possessing illegal weapons, maintaining contacts with foreign agents, performing services for an illegal organization. They carry a maximum sentence of 15 years imprisonment.

The suggestion of an arrangement with the prosecution was voiced recently after publication of the indictment, which was submitted to Jerusalem district court by the State Attorney General, Gabriel Bach.

The charges against Archbishop Capucci are regarded as particularly serious, because, in addition to being accused of smuggling arms into Jerusalem from Beirut in his Mercedes limousine on three separate occasions, he is also accused of providing arms to three brothers called Malabi. The brothers, who are residents of East Jerusalem, were arrested some time ago in connection with the killing of a taxi driver in the capital. His taxi was filled with explosives and parked in busy Ben-Yehuda Street during the rush hour. The suspicions of the police were aroused and the explosives were rendered harmless.

The Malabi brothers have also been charged with siting three Katyusha rockets on the outskirts of Jerusalem last June and training them on the centre of the city and on the King David Hotel, where the U.S. Secretary of State, Dr. Henry Kissinger, was staying at the time.

A group of eight Roman Catholic monks and priests have issued a statement here condemning efforts by the leadership of the Greek Catholic Church to obtain the release without trial of Archbishop Capucci.

"We wish the process of justice to establish the full truth," the statement said. "None of the parties has anything to gain by political bargaining or by compromises behind the scenes. A church leader, a pastor, whatever his political position, must never be involved directly or indirectly in violence."

The statement also criticized the Greek Catholic Patriarch Maximos V. Hakim, a former archbishop in Haifa, whose seat is now in Lebanon, for remarks he made in defence of Archbishop Capucci. Patriarch Maximos declared recently: "History teaches us that during the Nazi period in Germany, many bishops did far more illegal acts to help the Jews. I do not see why today we have to condemn a man . . . simply because he is trying to help the Arabs."

The monks' and priests' statement asked: "How can one compare the actions of men who risked their lives to shelter Jews and save them from death with the activities of a prelate directly involved in the activities of an organization which murders unarmed civilians?"

The signatories of the statement are Israeli citizens who are members of the Assumptionist, Carmelite, Dominican and Fathers of Zion orders.

Maalot to receive Hadassah-WIZO gift of medical service station

By T. SCHNURMACHER

MONTREAL – Hadassah-WIZO of Canada intends to provide the town of Maalot, Israel, with a medical service station for its needy and indigent women and children.

Maalot was the scene of a terrorist attack where 20 school children were killed several months ago.

The decision to build the medical facilities was reached at Hadassah's recent national executive meeting in Quebec City. About 120 women from Victoria to St. John's attended the conference.

At the meeting, it was reported that towns such as Maalot are peopled by immigrants from North Africa, and they often feel left out of the mainstream of Israeli life.

Hadassah-WIZO wants to improve medical facilities for its women and children.

Lily Frank, Hadassah's executive director, added: "Conference members also decided to expand the educational programs for WIZO members. We are working with the Canadian Zionist Federation, distributing booklets as well as planning discussions and lectures on various topics."

The national executive approved plans to enlarge the Acco Youth Village (near Haifa). The Youth Village will expand to provide live-in facilities for up to 500 youngsters.

Young immigrants who have dropped out of the regular Israeli school system, slow learners, and other problem children receive vocational training at the Village where they get the attention that the regular system cannot provide.

Neri Bloomfield, national president of Hadassah-WIZO said in evaluating the meeting, "The leadership has been made available to members and is open to its ideas. Much of the conference was held in small groups to encourage in-depth discussion of the problems of members and chapters."

She expressed concern that career-oriented women often shun the less dramatic role of the volunteer.

"Every Jewish woman, whatever her talent may be, can provide a meaningful contribution to her people through the programs of Hadassah-WIZO," she said. "Volunteers are the lifeblood of the organization."

Eddie Creed discusses plans for UJA president's mission

TORONTO – Israelis look forward to seeing Torontonians in Israel because "our city is a jewel in their eyes," according to Eddie Creed, chairman of the 1975 United Jewish Appeal campaign.

Creed spoke at a meeting at the Inn on the Park at which he outlined plans for the UJA's President's Mission which will spend 10 days in Israel from Oct. 21 to Oct. 30.

Recalling that the President's Mission last year was one of the first to go to Israel after the Yom Kippur War, Creed said that "things haven't changed much there -- except that we will now find a country prepared for a war which nobody in Israel wants. The Israelis want to see us again and talk to us."

Creed said study missions have been the greatest experience of his life. "No matter what you experience during your lifetime," he said, "you can't match the feeling and inspiration you get through participation in a mission."

The mission is under the auspices of President Ephraim Katzir who will host a reception for the mission members at his official residence in Jerusalem. Following the reception, the mission will have dinner at the Knesset with Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

Mission members will survey the cease-fire lines on the Israel-Syrian border, visit the Haifa naval base and an air force base, and have dinner with Shimon Peres, minister of defence.

Also scheduled are lunch with Mayor Z. Zilker of Ashdod, a reception with Mayor Teddy Kollek of Jerusalem, lunch with Pinhas Sapir, chairman of the Jewish Agency, and a reception with Ezra Shapiro, president of Keren Hayesod.

An oneg shabbat featuring the Israeli army choir is another highlight, as is a reception scheduled with the Panovs, the famed ballet dancers who fled Russia to live in Israel.

Terrorism flares again in north amid news of Syrian arms buildup

JERUSALEM (JCNS) – The killing of two Arab terrorists and two Israeli soldiers in a Galilean orchard has highlighted the deteriorating situation on Israel's northern border. The terrorists had penetrated six miles into Israel from Lebanon.

In the past 10 days Palestinian terrorists, who had been fairly quiet for several weeks as a result of Israeli reprisals and protective measures, have made five raids. One possible explanation for the increase in tension is the object of the Palestinian terrorist organizations to get more publicity with an eye on participation at the Geneva peace talks.

A curfew has been imposed on Fasuta, a Christian Arab village. Residents were confined to their homes until further notice and no cars were allowed to leave the village.

Rucksacks carried by the dead terrorists were found to contain automatic rifles, explosives, detonators and leaflets in Hebrew, Arabic and English. The leaflets stated that hostages had been taken by the terrorists and asked for the French and Romanian ambassadors in Israel to come to the supposed site to negotiate. The language used in the leaflets was the same as that used in leaflets issued by the Arab terrorists who killed 22 children in a school building in Maalot, only five miles from Fasuta, in May. Similar leaflets were found on the bodies of the terrorists killed earlier. Apparently both groups intended to repeat the Maalot murders.

Western experts have now confirmed persistent Israeli inspired reports about the arms build-up in Syria. They estimate that Syria is now poised to match the military potential of Egypt. However, what is causing particular concern to the Israelis is the stockpiling of Soviet-made SCUD ground-to-ground missiles and advanced MiG jet fighters.

The missiles are known to have a range of about 185 miles. The Syrians unleashed one at the new town of Migdal HaEmek during the Yom Kippur War, causing extensive damage. The Egyptians are known to have used at least one in the Sinai desert which is not known to have given the Israelis much concern.

The delivery of two squadrons of the MiG 23 "Flogger" jets with speeds touching 2,000 mph, which can outpace American Phantoms, has also surprised Western military analysts.

Syria has become the first non-Communist country to get the fighters, which are not yet even in service with most of Russia's Warsaw Pack allies.

The Russians are also understood to have made good the heavy Syrian tank losses during the war in the battle for the Golan Heights. Some Western experts speculated that Syria could now have about 2,500 tanks. Sources here believe the Syrians are bent on starting a new war if the Geneva negotiations do not give them all the territory they seek.

The factor that Israeli towns are now within the range of Syrian missiles is behind Israel's plea to the U.S. for more weapons to maintain the balance of power in the area in its favor.

The U.S. Secretary of State Dr. Henry Kissinger is planning to visit the Middle East next month to begin setting the scene for the next round of the Geneva talks. With the Syrian arms build-up, the Israelis are in no mood for compromise or apparent moderation.

No progress may endanger Mideast peace

ATLANTA (JTA) -

Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D. Wash.) warned that the stability of the Middle East could be undermined by pressure on Israel to make more territorial concessions in the absence of genuine, negotiated progress toward peace.

"In view of the unrelenting flow of sophisticated Soviet arms to Syria it is unreasonable to expect further Israeli withdrawals from the relatively favorable defensive positions they now hold," Jackson said.

The senator addressed the opening plenary session of Hadassah's 60th annual national convention meeting at the Marriott Motor Hotel. About 2,500 delegates attended the four-day convention. Jackson reiterated his support for a Middle East settlement that would leave Israel with the kind of defensible borders that the Israelis themselves, without American forces, can maintain and defend.

"The real need now is to shift the emphasis of American diplomacy away from its present focus on Israeli withdrawal toward an effort to define a future stable peace," he said. "The urgent priority is to open a direct Arab-Israeli dialogue for peace."

Jackson expressed "the gravest doubt" about the widsom of supplying nuclear reactors to the Middle East. "There is no way adequate to safeguard a 600-megawatt reactor against Egyptian expropriation," he said. "The mere possession of such a quantity of plutonium would expose the United States to blackmail and coercion. We would have to evaluate every move in the Middle East in terms of whether the probable Egyptian reaction might be the abrogation of negotiated safeguards aimed at preventing Egyptian acquisition of nuclear weapons."

Noting that the promise of reactors to Israel and Egypt was made by President Nixon when he visited the Mideast in June, Jackson urged the Ford Administration to "at once reconsider" this move.

Immigrant camp moved following fearful protest

VIENNA (JTA) -

Vienna Socialist Mayor Leopold Gratz promised to relocate a transit camp for Jewish emigrants from the Soviet Union from a densely populated area. The transit camp, established only last week in a former children's home at the Vienna suburb of Simmering, will be transferred to another site in the near future, a government spokesman said.

Gratz's decision followed protests from people living near the camp who feared possible Arab terrorist attacks.

The Austrian Red Cross, without previous announcement, had transferred the camp from a former army barrack at Woellersdoft to Simmering. Wide protests were the result. The camp is run under the supervision of the Austrian Red Cross which has been responsible for the emigrants since Chancellor Bruno Kreisky ruled the shutdown of the Jewish Agency-run camp at Schoenau last year in exchange for the release of a group of Jewish emigrants held as hostages by Arab terrorists.

Gratz who has promised a new transfer, although Interior Minister Otto Roesch said only last week that there was no danger to people living near the new camp, said he would try to find a new site within the next few weeks to house the Soviet emigrants. "Until then, the Simmering camp will continue to operate," he said.

The camp is closely watched by steel-helmeted Austrian police. A two-metre wall and a barbed wire fence surround the whole area. Kreisky, in recent months has stressed repeatedly the site of the transit camp should be changed from time to time to prevent any Arab terrorist actions.

Plan to invest $1.2 million in family development centre

LONDON (JCNS) -

One of Anglo-Jewry's oldest voluntary organizations -- the Norwood Homes for Jewish Children -- plans to invest almost $1,200,000 in the establishment of a child and family development centre in Jerusalem. Norwood was established in 1795.

The fund is part of the more than $3 million which Norwood received from the Lambeth Borough Council in compensation for the compulsory acquisition of its premises in July. A delegation will go to Israel in November to study the details of the project which was proposed by Teddy Kollek, the Mayor of Jerusalem, to Norwood's joint treasurer, Lord Hirshfield during his recent visit to Israel.

The establishment of the centre -- in partnership with the Jerusalem municipality - would involve Norwood in a capital outlay of $750,000 and in an obligation to cover possible deficit up to $75,000 annually for an initial five year's period.

Mayor Teddy Kollek

Norwood delegates will comprise of P.M. Samuel, the president, Lord Hirshfield and Sidney Mason, joint treasurers, Sidney Frosh, chairman of Norwood's recently set up overseas projects subcommittee and Harold Altman, the executive director.

The Jerusalem centre is only one of several projects on which Norwood intends to spend its compensation money. Another scheme under consideration is assistance for North African children now living in France.

Disclosing details of the planned Israeli project, Altman said that children and families in Britain will nevertheless have first call on Norwood funds.

Start building in the Golan

TEL AVIV (JCNS) -

Despite the increase in tension on the northern frontiers with Lebanon and Syria, the Israelis have begun clearing several acres in the southern sector of the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights in preparation for the building of an urban centre to service area settlements.

Within two months, workers will begin to lay the foundation for the centre of Katzrin, a housing ministry spokesman said. The centre is scheduled for completion by the end of next year.

The building of Katzrin is starting while Syria is demanding complete Israeli withdrawal from the Golan Heights, under the threat of refusing to renew the mandate for the UN forces that keep both armies apart on the ceasefire line. The mandate expires on Nov. 30.

Israeli forces captured a large segment of the Golan Heights in the Six Day War in 1967. After initial setbacks in the Yom Kippur War, they expanded the salient they controlled. Under the disengagement accord reached with Syria in May, Israel pulled back from territory they took last October. A UN buffer zone was created.

The housing ministry spokesman, Yehuda Laish, said land clearing operations for Katzrin began several days ago. He said the centre will occupy a few acres.

The centre is not designed to be the beginning of a town, and will merely provide shopping facilities and an industrial area for the 17 settlements dotting the rocky plain, all built since 1967. Initially, it will house 19 families, he said.

Meanwhile, Israeli artillery has been shelling suspected targets near the Lebanese village of Jouiaya, 12 miles north of the frontier, as part of Israel's "preventive-action" policy.

Canadian native dies in aircrash

TEL AVIV (JTA) -

Two Israeli couples died in the crash of a TWA airliner off Greece last week which took the lives of all 88 persons aboard. The Israeli victims were identified as Ben Zion Shai, 30, his wife Elisheva, 27, and Dr. Richard Katzman, 36 and his wife, Alida, whose age was not given.

The Katzmans, the parents of three children, were not immediately identified as Israelis because they held American as well as Israeli passports. They settled a year ago at Rehovoth where Dr. Katzman was employed as a biophysicist at the Weizmann Institute of Science. His wife was employed by the Absorption Ministry at Ben-Gurion Airport where she helped process new immigrants.

The couple planned to return permanently to the United States and therefore had sent their children, John, 10, Aggie, 9, and Tony, 5, to Los Angeles several weeks ago to enroll in school.

Ben Zion (Barry) Shai was born in Canada and grew up in Uruguay. He settled in Israel 12 years ago and married his wife who was a sabra. The couple had two children, aged 6 and 4. Shai, who owned a shoe moulds workshop was travelling to Europe with his wife on business. They had planned to continue on to Canada to visit relatives.

Prelate sponsoring Protocols of Zion

ROME (JCNS) -

An Italian edition of the vehemently anti-Semitic Protocols of the Elders of Zion is being mailed to bishops, priests, and Catholic laymen throughout Italy. A preface to the book condemns Judaism, Freemasonry, Communism, new theology and Catholics endorsing the Ecumenical Council.

A previous edition was first published in 1972 by order of Elsa Bertuetti, 75-year-old owner of a religious library in San Giovanni Rotondo, a small town in southern Italy. Five thousand copies were printed.

According to the weekly Panorama, the sponsor of the new edition is a high ranking prelate, a friend of Bertuetti. The president of the Union of Italian Jewish Committees, Sergio Piperno, said it was incredible that such books could circulate without police intervention. "I regret to say that the determination to curb such wicked actions is lacking," he said.

Purchase of Israel Bonds goes to the root of survival of that land and its people

By ELLIE TESHER

TORONTO –

The Israeli government's decision to eliminate the $100 Israel Bond purchase has been in effect since March 1. Yet, even as we now approach the fall wind-up of the Israel Bond campaign, many people are still unclear as to why the change was necessary.

The issue is not really a question of the value of the Bond, or of the logic of what amount one should purchase, or even of what each of us, personally, can afford. The answer goes deeper than a rationale – it goes to the very roots of the survival of a people, and the survival of a land that has taken us almost 2,000 years to regain.

Most people who ask the question, already know the facts. Mainly because of rising costs, it simply became uneconomical for Israel to sell the $100 Bond. The expense of handling and depositing the money, issuing, registering, insuring and processing the Bond, of paying a fee to the transfer agent, the Chase Manhattan Bank, and finally the cost of redeeming the Bond upon maturity meant that the finance ministry was paying too much of a percentage to justify the continuation of the $100 denomination. Cold arithmetic required that the minimum Bond document be changed to $250.

But reason is not enough -- we must internalize the knowledge so that our emotions can also grasp it. Israel may not be "at war" at this very moment, but the small nation is most definitately in a state of war in terms of preparations, in maintaining a large mobilized force, and in the resultant effect on her economy.

Here again are some of the details: over 3,000 young people were killed during the Yom Kippur War. Over 6,000 were wounded and crippled so that they cannot participate in the work force. Since the war, some 5,000 Israelis have emigrated from the country. The total is 15,000 out of the labor ranks, causing enormous difficulty for the country to develop the productivity needed to re-stabilize the economy. The war itself incurred a deficit of over $5 billion.

This is what is being asked of Jewish Diaspora youth, aged 16 - 30: to give six months of their lives by going to Israel to work in whatever capacities possible and help buttress the work force.

This is what is being asked of the previous $100 Bond purchaser -- to raise his sights. For example, Bond clubs that worked around a "10 people for 10 months" format, can certainly re-adjust to a 25 people or two terms arrangement. Minimum Bond supporters can re-evaluate their own circumstances. Generous gift donors can realize that a $250 Israel Bond is as appropriate a bar mitzvah gift from two close friends or relatives, as a $100 Bond is from one. For all Jews it is as necessary this year as last, that we "sacrifice" a pleasure or "extra" on behalf of Israel's desperate economic situation. The continued costs of survival and reconstruction, are overwhelming.

For those who argue that inflation has affected their ability to raise their Bond purchase, let us look at the $100 Bond as the real "victim" of inflation, that simply had to go. As Rabbi David Monson expressed it, the $50 Bond, established in 1953, has risen in cost to $100 in 1955 and now to $250. Since most people who buy Bonds intend the loan to the State of Israel to be supportive and helpful, it is easy to understand why we must respond to the Israeli government's decision.

It seems hardly necessary to point out, how inflation and unavoidable taxation have affected the average individual as well as all of the Israeli population. I recall a report from last November's President's Mission to Israel. Many of the participants, stimulated by what they had observed in Sinai, on the Golan Heights, in hospitals and convalescent homes, were rising to express their desire to increase their financial support of Israel. One Israeli woman, who was a guest that evening, also rose and thanked everyone for their help. "I have no money to give," she said. "I can only pledge the lives of my four sons."

Canadian Jewry is being asked to buy Bonds this year, in greater amounts than ever before. Is is really so much to ask?

Community body to meet

WINNIPEG –

The Winnipeg Jewish Community Council will hold its first annual meeting Oct. 2 (at the Shaarey Zedek Synagogue).

The Council was established following a merger of the Canadian Jewish Congress Winnipeg operation of the Western Region with the Jewish Welfare Fund of Winnipeg, ratified in January, 1973, at a joint meeting of the National Council of the Canadian Jewish Congress Western Region, the Winnipeg Congress Council and the board of directors of the Jewish Welfare Fund of Winnipeg.

In accordance with the bylaws of the Winnipeg Jewish Community Council, contributing members (every person 18 years or over who has made a monetary contribution to the current annual Combined Jewish Appeal) are eligible to participate in the annual meetings of the Winnipeg Jewish Community Council and elect representatives to the Delegate Assembly from among names submitted in nomination by Winnipeg organizations.

The Delegate Assembly serves as a forum for all matters which relate to the Community Council and for matters which are of general concern to the Jewish community. The contributing members at the annual meeting of the Winnipeg Jewish Community Council will elect delegates - at - large equal in number to the total number of delegates designated by constituent and organization members. The first meeting of the Delegate Assembly will be held some time in November.

Immigrants lack housing

By JANICE ARNOLD

MONTREAL –

Three hundred new Jewish immigrant families in Montreal are victims of a critical lack of suitable housing, according to the national office of Jewish Immigrant Aid Services (JIAS). Other factors contributing to the shortage are an unusually large influx of immigrants and a generally low accommodation vacancy rate.

In addition to the 300 families received here between January and August, 1974, another 30 families are expected to arrive this month. Especially large is the number of Moroccans who account for about half of the total new immigration. This increase is attributed to the uneasy political climate in their homeland. The rest come mainly from the Soviet Union and Israel.

JIAS has placed these newcomers unable to stay with relatives in temporary accommodations in the Cote des Neiges area for an indefinite period. However, the rents are proving too much for many of the new tenants.

The majority of the new immigrants are young families with three or four children (who are not accepted by some landlords) and come from a broad range of occupations including teaching, management, and skilled labor.

Many of the immigrants must contend with the dual problem of job and apartment hunting.

Holiday appeals must achieve highest degree of success possible

A great many momentous developments occurred in the Middle East and in the United States during the past year. But as we approach the New Year, our thoughts are again dominated by the impact of the war that broke out last Yom Kippur.

On the eve of the first anniversary of that conflict, we are reminded that it was the costliest war, in life and treasure, in the history of Israel. Even now, and in the year to come, the people of Israel will have to pay in added hardships and greater sacrifices for the expenditure of resources that was required to defend their homeland and their freedom.

Hope and faith have always reinforced our people's armor in times of trial. The historic disengagement agreements consummated with Egypt and Syria have opened a promising door to peace. But at the same time the terrorist attacks on Kiryat Shemona and Maalot shocked us into recognition of the obstacles and dangers that still lie ahead.

On Yom Kippur 5734, Jews in synagogues throughout the world were shaken by news of the sneak Arab attack. This Yom Kippur one year later, the same synagogues will re-echo with memorial prayers for the 3,000 brave men who gave their lives to save Israel from the gravest threat in its history.

Even following the disengagement of forces agreements with Egypt and Syria, there remains the spectre of renewed war as the Arab world amasses new vast quantities of armaments and again engages in threats and pressures. Thus, we enter the New Year in an atmosphere of anxiety and unease.

In these difficult times Israel looks to us to take the lead in assuring the fullest means of financial support to overcome the current grave economic difficulties and to engender the strength required in order to deter a war and create the kind of atmosphere in which the Arabs will understand that there is no alternative to negotiations and peace.

So much of Israel's well-being and its capacity to solve trying social and political problems depend on the extent to which Israel Bonds will help combat inflation and other serious ills threatening to undermine the country's economic structure.

It is for this reason that the community-wide activities of the Israel Bond Organization during the High Holidays, particularly the Yom Kippur appeals in the synagogues, must achieve the highest degree of success.

Jewish peoplehood re-affirmed

The five day Conference on Minorities held at Huberdeau, Quebec, by the Canadian Union of Jewish Students and its senior international body is a concrete illustration of the active concern for Jewish life being expressed by the present generation of Jewish students. Further, the logistics of accommodating 300 students, many from as far away as Germany, Israel, England, Switzerland, France, Sweden, Norway, and Belgium, was a feat in itself. The conference's successful accomplishment reflects the seriousness with which organizers and volunteers approached their work.

The Conference on Minorities enabled Canadian Jewish students to have close contact with young Jews from abroad, and particularly from Israel. The informal discussions and workshops confronted young people with the current dilemmas in Jewish life. The issues of Diaspora Jewry and Israel, Jewish relations with other minority groups, and Jewish minority groups within our own communities were discussed at length.

Perhaps the most important result of the conference, above the many hours of intensive workshops and keynote speeches, was the re-affirmation of Jewish peoplehood. "We belong . . . we are one people" was the most visible consequence of the five-day meeting. For many of the young adults, hearing a thick Swedish accent spoken by a young man wearing a kipah was an invigorating and enlightening encounter. For others, the experience of celebrating shabbat, perhaps for the first time, had a lasting if nor permanent meaning.

Although the impact of the intellectual component of the schedule might be temporary, there was a strengthening of identity which seemed more lasting.

The funds provided by the Canadian Jewish Congress, Hillel, and the Canadian secretary of state department through a multicultural grant, was indeed well spent.

The conference however was not without deficiencies. A subject as broad and comprehensive as 'minorities' gave rise to a problem -- many did not feel satisfied that their pet topic received full airing. What seemed to be missing was a definition of conference objectives by the organizers, with the workshops and speeches focusing on that theme.

This conference demonstrated well the maturity needed to make important contributions to Jewish life on the part of the university students.

As a result of conferences of this kind, the present generation is being prepared to assume the stewardship of our Jewish communities. Their time will come.

Day of Atonement brings men closer to perception of life of eternity

By RABBI DAVID KIRSHENBAUM

In the eyes of the believer everything in this world has its purpose and goal. Nothing happens without the will of God. As Rabbi Bunim told his disciples: "Even the fate of a grain of sand blown from one place to another has been pre-ordained by Providence."

His faith firm in God saves the believer a life of peace and contentment. He is a whole being; he suffers from no inner conflicts, and is free from contradictions. He is a 'mistapek b'muat,' who satisfies himself with the very minimal. He asks no queries and has no complaints; whatever happens to him, he accepts as the will of the Creator. His confidence is firm and solid within him. Should evil befall him, he does not howl or lament his fate but receives it in the spirit of love just as he receives good for "just as one shows thanks for the good, so must one give thanks for ill."

He looks with wonderment upon the world around him for to him it is a Divine manifestation in which he senses the Creator who governs it. He can see man with all his achievements and inventions but in man he perceives the Creator of man. All his life he has felt the Creator who has brought man upon the earth; he believes with his utmost faith that God's influence touches everything in this world, that man's greatest task is to serve and fulfil the Creator and that man's thoughts must always be "in examination of Eternity and the Eternal, blessed be His name!"

More than ever does the believer feel this way on the Day of Awe and Dread. For Yom Kippur is not only a day of self-accounting, of repentance, of forgiveness, but it is a day in which the soul ascends, a day when the soul shows its domination, frees itself from the rule of the body, in fact overpowers the body and compels it to fulfil its majestic command to ascend higher in to the world of pure spirituality and to betake itself to the 'malchuth Shaddai' -- the kingdom of the Divine -- and for one day in the year to forget the severity of the world.

And on this sacred day not only does the believer ask the Everlasting One to forgive his sins and transgressions but on this day he feels that "the whole world is full of His glory" (Berachoth 10) that man in his substance and meaning is "a small part of God." Man was created by God with a higher goal in this world. The earthly in man -- that which is of the dust -- is not the true man. Like this earth, man is composed of matter, matter which has been touched by the Divine spirit. Through man's creation and existence we see the greatness of the Creator. Man's earthliness is not the goal in itself -- the goal is something higher, nobler and less material.

On the Day of Atonement more than on any other day, the believer feels the positive guidance, the all-highest authority of Providence which teaches and clearly shows him the path of his course in life and what are his obligations in terms of deeds.

Yom Kippur is the "day in which the soul ascends"; it brings man closer to the perception of the only true life -- the life of eternity.

Israel shocks Egyptian writer

By MARCIA KRETZMER
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO –

Amos Elon, controversial author of the best-selling book Israelis: Founders and Sons, once remarked that the national mood in Israel veers between exuberant optimism and the deepest boreboding and gloom.

Some of this emotional seesawing was in evidence recently. In a period when the talk has been of incipient outbreak of hostilities on the Syrian front and the instability of the Rabin government, Sana Hassan, influential Egyptian journalist and political commentator, created a good deal of interest by her sudden arrival in Israel to talk about the prospects for peace with Israeli colleagues.

Back in February, Ms. Hassan created a sensation with an article entitled An Egyptian's Vision of Peace, published in The New York Times. Here was an Egyptian, daughter of a former ambassador to the U.S. and married to a member of the Egyptian political elite, arguing that never had the two parties to the Middle East conflict been so close to achieving agreement.

Sana Hassan

Egypt, she argues, had learned that Israel neither should nor could be wiped off the map. Egypt had been made painfully aware of the fantastic social cost placed on the flagging Egyptian economy. Papers circulated secretly by a leading Egyptian playwright were asking, "Our peasants have remained with their poverty and ignorance and we have spent enough money to build the Aswan dam twice over. What is this madness?"

The three obstacles both sides have to surmount is mistaken perceptions, exaggerated expectations and rigid thinking, wrote Ms. Hassan. She continued: "Neither of us has been absolutely right, both of us share the responsibility for the Middle East tragedy. Both the Arabs, who did not empathize sufficiently with the Jewish plight and failed to recognize that the Jewish claim was of equal validity with their own, and the Zionist settlers who either ignored the Arabs out of moral myopia or were aware of their presence, but felt their interests could justifiably be sacrificed for the sake of creating the state of Israel. Both the Israelis, who after 1967, out of distrust and greed, lapsed in their peace initiatives, and the Arabs who initially were reluctant to meet the Israelis halfway and have all along refused direct neogitiations."

This approach seemed to portend some kind of breakthrough in Arab thinking and was cautiously hailed.

Arabs before had criticized their country, especially after the Six Day War. They had criticized the waste, the corruption, the laxity and boastfulness which led to their abysmal defeat. But few questioned or dared to question openly the deeper reasons behind their entry into the war in the first place, or their continued hostility to Israel.

A discussion between Ms. Hassan and author Elon, who is an outspoken 'dove', followed and was also printed in The New York Times.

There was a certain element of artificiality in the meeting. Each side felt obliged to give the most charitable presentation of their country's policy. Nevertheless, the meeting was a startling and moving breakthrough. Here were two people, anxious for peace and speaking a common language instead of hurling abuse and innuendo at each other.

Recently, the attempt at rapprochement was renewed. Sana Hassan visited Israel in the company of French painter Mark Halter and his wife who is writing a book on the Palestinians. Ms. Hassan toured the country and was invited to a wide-ranging discussion of the Mideast conflict and the prospects for peace with the editorial board of the Labor Zionist daily, Davar.

Rumors were rife. Was she on a special mission? Could she be an emissary? As if to scotch all rumors, the Egyptian government declared that she had no connection with any government personnel and in fact resided in the U.S. (Mrs. Hassan is a doctoral candidate at Harvard), and they threatened to take away her passport.

"I don't think they will do that. As you know, my husband serves in the government," said Ms. Hassan. "But Egypt cannot afford to give official sanction to my journey here in front of the Arab states."

The Egyptian writer with the almost uncanny understanding of Israel's problems, confessed that her first confrontation with Israel came as a shock. She had never expected to see in Israel such recognizably middle-eastern features.

"I had imagined Israel more 'Europeanized', excessively efficient," she said. "But Tel Aviv reminds me of Alexandria: the town itself; the palm trees; the people eating sunflower seeds; the sea; the open-air cafes. There seems to be lots of red-tape, lots of bureaucracy.

"Israeli men are different from European Jews. They watch the girls; they attempt to strike up conversations. They are more sure of themselves. The whole atmosphere is noisier, more Mediterranean than I imagined."

She spoke of more parallels between Israel and Egypt. "Just as in Israel there is a struggle going on between the moderates and the extremists. Last year at the time of the downing of the Libyan plane, what surprised me were the number of moderate voices in Egypt. People were really looking for an opportunity to engage in dialogue."

Ms. Hassan sees the Palestinian question as the core of the Mideast conflict. "There has been much short-sightedness in Israel. People were afraid to recognize the existence of the Palestinians, as though it weakened their own claim to the land. I have been impressed by Israelis who say they want ties with the Arabs, who are willing to admit their mistakes and share the responsibility . . . If Israelis are willing to recognize the moral basis of the Palestinian rights, then in fact it strengthens their own claim."

Open disagreement broke out when Ms. Hassan proposed the policies which Israel ought to adopt -- giving the West Bank to the Palestinians. The Israelis were sceptical that a neighboring Palestinian state could be anything more than an additional thorn in their sides, rather than a solution of the problem. They wondered whether the Arab states, rather than being convinced of the need for peace were not instead preparing for a final, deadly round.

Going to the heart of the psychological barriers preventing frank discussion between the two sides, Ms. Hassan said, "There's a kind of irony here. Israel sees the all-powerful Russians behind the Arabs. She claims she is beleaguered, with only world Jewry at her side, and because of the Holocaust experience, mortally afraid of Arab intentions. Israel does not realize for a moment that the Arabs are afraid of Israeli expansionism. They see only the unconquerable Israeli army and the U.S. with its Phantom aircraft, behind her.

"It is difficult to extend our bloodied hands to each other, but Britain extended her hand to the Mau Mau, American had to do it with the Viet Cong."

She concluded: "What I write in the Egyptian press cannot possibly compare to the effect that would be created if I were to bring an Israeli back with me to Egypt."

In these unstable, uncertain days, Ms. Hassan's presence in Israel is to be welcomed. Discussions such as these will not themselves solve the problems of the area, but they could pave the way for bringing a settlement closer.

Letters to the Editor

A bouquet and a barb for rabbi

Dear Editor:

I commend you highly for running the item Aug. 30 by Rabbi Gottesman. It is a cause of admirable and worthy purpose.

J. Breslin,
Toronto

Dear Editor:

Rabbi Meir Gottesman, your column of Aug. 30, refers to intermarriage (between Jew and non-Jew) as being the "disgrace of the North American continent."

On what meat does this "Gottesman" feed, that he would utter as disgraceful a statement as this? In a free and democratic society, communicants of Judaism or secular Jews, for good and sufficient reason of their own, have every right in the world to marry whosoever they please. It is with great temerity that Rabbi Gottesman presumes to characterize such marriages as the "disgrace of the North American continent." He is an Orthodox Jew and therefore knows full well, that there are even Biblical precedents for out-marriage of quite prominent Israelites: Moses for example, Joseph for another.

Apparently, Rabbi Gottesman even militates against those marriages in which the non-Jewish partner has converted to Judaism previous to the ceremony, at any rate the term intermarriage is usually applied to such unions, while "mixed marriages" are those in which the non-Jewish partner has maintained his or her original religious adherence.

Rabbi Gottesman may be asked to ponder on the issue of the dreadful Tay-Sachs disease, a degenerative and always fatal sickness which is passed on to the infants of Ashkenazi parents, but not to those children whose one parent is of gentile origin.

Quite apart from the matter of heredity, intermarriages and mixed marriages represent a normal concomitant of freedom in the choice of partners. No doubt, that in some instances the Jewish partner and the children of such marriage may be lost to Judaism. Per contra, in other cases the non-Jewish partner and/or the children of the marriage will find Judaism to be the religion of their choice. By and large, statistics tend to bear out the latter situation for the North American continent.

Klaus J. Herrmann,
Montreal

ask the rabbi

Why fish meat can't be mixed in one dish

1. Why cannot fish and meat be mixed in one dish or served off one plate?

There is a saying in the Talmud (Pesahim 76b) that it is forbidden to eat fish that has been roasted together with meat because it is dangerous in that it can bring on "that other thing," understood to mean leprosy.

On the basis of this, the Shulchan Aruch (Yoreh Deah 116:2) rules that one should take care not to eat meat and fish together. However, Maimonides does not record this rule at all and it has been suggested that he holds that since the reason given in the Talmud no longer applies (whatever the belief in those days, to eat meat and fish together nowadays is not harmful), there is no objection to eating them together.

Consequently, some people disregard this prohibition. Others, however, argue that it is, after all, a law recorded in the Shulchan Aruch and, in any event, "the custom of Israel is Torah." It should, however, be noted that the Shulchan Aruch does not state categorically that it is forbidden, only that "one should take care."

There is a full discussion of the question in the Responsa of Rabbi Malkiel Tenenbaum of Lomza (Divrey Malkiel, Part II, No. 53).

Recalling Rothschild commitment

Landmark Events In Our History

By ROCHELLE CARR

It was Yom Kippur day, Sept. 16, 1812. Mayer Rothschild made his way slowly along Judengasse (Jew Street) to the Frankfurt synagogue. He was easily recognizable wearing an ever-present colored kipah, similar to the one his mother had made for him on his birth 68 years ago.

The fast that year was especially hard for him. A wound from an old operation was causing him great pain. His mind too, was troubled. In his lifetime he was not to see the burdens on his fellow Jews alleviated, despite his prodigious petitions to Europe's men of power to bring this about.

The old way persisted, even for him. Mayer Amschel von Rothschild whose numismatic interests changed from a hobby to a passion giving him the wherewithal to rescue German princes from financial disaster.

He knew the restrictions only too well. As a youth when he left the confines of the ghetto intending to study for a rabbinical career, he was forced to pay 'Jew toll' when crossing the river Main.

He was frequently stopped by Gentile street urchins, shouting, to the amusement of each other, "Do your duty, Jew!" He would stop, take off his hat, bow and then move on. He had done his duty.

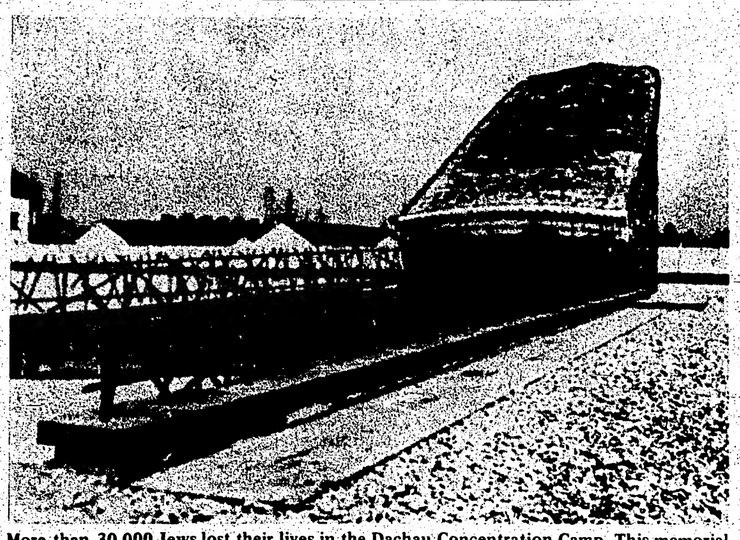
He remembered the struggle that ensued when he wanted to marry the former Gutele Schnapper. A Frankfurt edict limited the Jews of that city to 500 families and 12 marriages per year.

But that event was 42 years ago and five sons and five daughters ago. Now it was Yom Kippur, 1812. With the sounding of the shofar and neilah service over, Mayer made his way home, slowly, to break the fast.

With his strength abating, he sat at his desk to draw up his final will which would set the precedent (upheld until very recently) for family enterprises to be solely in the hands of Rothschild males.

". . . my daughters, sons-in-law and their heirs having no part whatsoever in the existing firm M. A. Rothschild und Sohne . . . nor the right to examine the said business, its books, papers, inventory etc."

Three days later he died. In addition to a vast fortune, important connections throughout Europe and the power of the Rothschild name, Mayer bequeathed something else to his sons and later descendants -- the beginning of a family legacy of commitment to one's fellow Jews.



More than 30,000 Jews lost their lives in the Dachau Concentration Camp. This memorial to Jewish dead at Dachau was designed by H. Guttman. Dedication ceremony was in 1967.

Infamous Dachau is magnet for tourists attracted by murder camp's grisly past

By JERRY FAIVISH

DACHAU, Germany -

From Munich, the distance is only 10 miles and the time 30 minutes, but in reality, it's a world away. It is the site of the Dachau concentration camp, which was the first concentration camp in Germany and a model for the many others that followed throughout Europe. The original camp located here existed for 12 years of torture and terror from 1933 until its liberation in 1945. What one sees now is a restoration, which was built by the Bavarian government according to the specifications of the International Dachau Committee, and has been open since May, 1965.

When you come to Dachau, you will notice the great number of tourists here -- a much greater number than one would expect; for Dachau has become an attraction for the curious and those obsessed with the past. But Dachau is anything but a regular tourist haven. Its infamous past, and the profound effect that it has on its visitors has taken care of that.

It was here that thousands were first indoctrinated to the 'doctrine' of Nazi Germany; it was here that thousands were subjected to 'standing tortures'; and it was here where all the prisoners were forced to remain passive at least twice each day for a humiliating roll call.

The barracks -- it was here that the prisoners tried to escape their tormentors -- at least for a while. But mere walls or periodic rests couldn't stop the continual hell of physical and mental terror. It was here that the 'living dead' tried to survive. The museum -- the pictures, the documents, the pain of the whipping block, the horrors of the medical experiments, the desperate expression of human emotions. It's much more than history. It was the attempted genocide of a nation -- it still is a stain on mankind.

The history of the other various aspects of the camp and the numerous memorials scattered throughout it, make a visitor do more than just look. Their message and the call of the dead say 'Do Not Forget!'. That is the message of Dachau. The barbed wire that remains is not there to lock people in or scar their flesh; it is there to prick the mind and tear the soul.

Dachau -- it's different from other Holocaust memorials because this is where it actually happened and the ground you walk on constantly haunts your mind. During its existence, 31,951 people ended up here. True, that's only a mere pittance as compared to Auschwitz or Treblinka where more than that number were murdered in days, but every life is important.

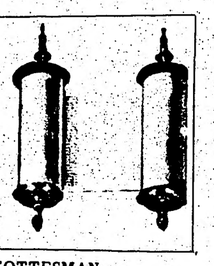
The Talmud tells us, that he who saves a single life, it's as if he saved the whole world. Now it's too late to save those who died -- let's at least remember them -- every one of them. In Dachau the past painfully cries out to you, the captive listener.

It's a gross, sobering place, and you may leave here quite sick -- but please come. In fact you must. The quote from Santayana, as you leave the museum tells you why. "Those Who Cannot Remember The Past Are Condemned To Repeat It." And once you are in Dachau, you will never forget. Dachau -- it's really a world away.

Jerry Faivish is an Osgoode Hall student travelling through Europe this summer.

This Yom Kippur, let us become youthful again by sticking to G-d, following the commandments

sparks from the torah



By RABBI MEIR GOTTESMAN

Parshat Vayelech/Shabbat Shuvah

Hashem Elokecha, Hu ha'ovayr li'fanecha . . . The L-rd they G-d, He will go over before thee . . .

Nobody lives forever . . . but when a person sticks to G-d, he can stay young all his life -- without pep pills . . .

Take Moses, for example . . . On the day he was supposed to pass away, he went from tribe to tribe to say goodbye. But he didn't just walk . . . Vayelech Mosha . . . he practically ran like a youngster. The Jews wondered, what's the rush? But Moses explained . . . "Listen, G-d commanded that I will no longer be able to lead you. But don't think it's because I'm old and tired -- a person who studies the Torah always finds enough strength . . . it's simply that my time has come." (Kli Yakar)

The Chasam Sofer, when he was a young man, decided to fast for three days consecutively. At the end of the third day, he was davening the Shmoneh Esray with a group of his friends, when a bunch of toughs began to taunt them. The friends ran away, but the Chasam Sofer calmly finished praying -- and promptly walloped the bullies . . .

It's not how many years you've lived that makes you old . . . it's how you live. That's why we find an interesting thing. When G-d told Moses that his time was up, Moses argued. "Okay . . . if you want to make Joshua the new leader, that's fine with me. But let me live and I'll be happy just to be his student . . ." What happened? The first time Joshua received a special prophecy, Moses began to feel a twinge of jealousy . . . Moses said to himself, "Forget it . . . what good is life if I'm going to waste it with petty feelings. I'd rather get to the next world . . ." (Midrash Rabbah)

The truth is, though, that Moses never really died -- a spark from his neshama is in every Jew who will ever live. On Yom Kippur that spark strives to come alive . . . how? When a Jew truly pours his heart out before G-d, makes a cheshbon hanefesh -- an inventory of what he has failed to do . . . and takes upon himself to improve . . .

A chassid once came to the tzadik Rabbi Elimelech to learn how to really shlug kappores -- the ceremony before Yom Kippur when a Jew swings a chicken over his head and says . . . "Zeh kaparosi -- this is my symbolic atonement . . ." Rab Elimelech told him to go to a certain Jewish inn-keeper and there he would see the "real thing" . . .

The Jew came to the inn the night before Yom Kippur and saw that it was full of drunken peasants. Finally, in the wee hours of the morning, the inn-keeper threw them out. The Jew watched as the inn-keeper took out a record book and started reading aloud . . . "On such and such a day I didn't pray properly . . . In that month I didn't give enough charity . . . On such and such a night I ate something questionable . . ." And so he went through his "inventory". Then he took out a second record book and began reading . . . "On such and such a day I had a terrible backache . . . In such and such a month they raised my taxes . . . Last week anti-Semites burned down my barn . . ." He then raised his eyes to Heaven . . . "Ribono shel Olam - let's make a deal . . . You forgive me my sins and I'll forgive You yours . . ." He lifted both books over his head and began reciting . . . "Zeh kaporasi . . . This is my atonement . . ." (Sipuray Chassidim)

This Yom Kippur let us become young again -- a child has no sins, we must wipe away our sins . . . Keeping Shabbat, keeping kosher, wearing tephillen, putting on tzitsis, fulfilling the mitzvah of mikveh, helping others, studying Torah, keeping the holidays . . . all our commandments . . . are they burdens? They are the loving gifts the Almighty has given us for our sakes, so that we can earn an eternal reward . . . Whom are we doing a favor when we keep the commandments? Whom are we hurting when we commit transgressions . . . The Almighty, was, is, and always will be . . . It is we who have to gain and lose . . .

Ashraychem Yisroel, mee metaher eschemo . . . Happy are we, happy is out lot . . . Look whom we have "business" with this Wednesday night and Thursday . . . Our Father in Heaven, who will be so close to us, ready to pardon and purify . . .

A gemar chasimah tovah. Shabbat Shalom.

Environmentalists celebrate victory over cement firm in battle over beauty spot

By NECHEMIA MEYERS
CJN Israel Correspondent

REHOVOT-

Israeli environmentalists are quietly celebrating a major victory in their struggle to prevent the Carmel National Park, one of the country's few centrally-located beauty spots, from being despoiled.

Nechemia Meyers

Bowing to intense public pressure, Haifa's Nesher Cement Company recently announced that it has abandoned plans to chew up a central section of the Park in order to quarry the raw material it will require for the next few decades. Instead, it will transport rock from a new site to be developed 20 miles northeast of Haifa, even though this will raise the cost of Nesher cement by an estimated $1.50 per ton.

Israel's most intractable environmental problems are to be found further south, in the densely populated Tel Aviv area, where one million people, a third of the country's population, now live. These problems are being energetically tackled by Tel Aviv's photogenic new mayor, ex-general Shlomo Lahat, who is careful to ensure that cameramen and journalists are informed in advance of his every move.

Soon after taking office, he ordered a thorough clean-up of the bustling outdoor Carmel Market, its first real face-lift in over a quarter century. The Market was shut down for a full day, costing its 700 pedlars an estimated $300,000 loss in turnover. Nevertheless, they are full of praise for the mayor, whose minions carted away 52 tons of refuse, some of it dating back to the period of the British Mandate (a fact corroborated by the dustmen archeologists, who found numerous pre-1948 coins at the bottom of refuse heaps).

The other environmental problems faced by Lahat and his fellow Tel Aviv area mayors cannot be solved in one-day operations. Perhaps the most pressing is connected with the Yarkon River or, more correctly, the Yarkon sewer.

The polluted Yarkon has long been more of a nuisance than the beauty spot it once was, but over the last few weeks its usual noxious odors have become far worse, causing headaches, nausea and breathing difficulties among residents of the district. Various explanations have been offered, the most probable being that untreated chemical wastes from a half dozen large food processing and pharmaceutical plants in the area suddenly came rushing into the River when a pipeline carrying them elsewhere burst open.

The pipeline has been repaired and several emergency measures taken. These include the pouring of 250,000 cubic meters of pure water into the River from large tanker trucks in an attempt to wash impurities into the sea, and the "cleansing" of the stream with limestone and hydrogen peroxide, dumped in by sanitation workers wearing gas masks. Despite these measures, the stench continues.

While there is no simple solution to the area's environmental problems, of which the "fragrant" Yarkon River is but one example, they could certainly be handled more efficiently if greater Tel Aviv were to be placed under one municipal authority instead of the dozen which now exist. Traffic, sewage and many other matters are regional in scope and simply cannot be dealt with within artificial city limits.

In fact, most Tel Aviv area mayors agree that there should be one super-municipality. However, they can't agree as to which of them should be the super-mayor of the super-municipality.

Israel must be first priority in 5735, columnist concludes

By J.B. SALSBERG

(Second of two columns)

J. B. Salsberg

A week ago, in my thumb-nail sketch of the legacy that the Jewish calendar year 5734 is leaving us, I dealt solely with Israel's experiences since the Yom Kippur War and with the harrowing problems the Jewish state has to face and resolve in the New Year. That was not accidental.

I am, no less than the next person, aware of the fact that the majority of the world's Jews live outside of Israel and that the dispersed Jewish communities -- large and small -- also encountered specific as well as general Jewish experiences in the past year that call for attention in any attempt to draw a year's-end balance sheet. Nevertheless, I did not start with North American Jewry -- where almost half of our people live -- but with Israel, whose total Jewish population is not much larger than that of the greater New York region. There is a reason for this approach.

To be sure, if I were not limited in space I would, of course, have enlarged on my evaluation of Israel's experiences and would have extended myself into the other major areas of Jewish living -- the United States, Russia, Canada etc. But while a columnist suffers from the rigid confinement of space, he is on the other hand, compelled to acquire the talent to compress the essence of a subject within the limiting barriers of his writing genre. And so, without minimizing the importance of Jewish events elsewhere, I concluded that Israel's legacy of the waning year overshadows all other Jewish experiences of the past 12 months.

In time of crisis every nation, peoplehood, or state that wants to survive must recognize its priorities and concentrate all its efforts in the direction that such priorities demand. Only the self-hating, the wilful or the blind can question whether in this moment of our history -- after the Holocaust, after the saddening experience of our second largest Jewish community (in the USSR) and after 26 years of unending struggle for survival of the reborn Jewish state -- whether at such critical juncture of our history the preservation of the state of Israel can be anything less than our first priority.

There is no denying the fact that North American Jews are confronted by colossal internal challenges and the past year has only added to the sharpness and the gravity of these problems. But who can doubt the assumption that a failure on the main front -- Israel -- would transform our present internal problems in North America to catastrophic dimensions?

The transcending importance of Israel for the future of the North American Jewish communities applies equally, and perhaps more immediately (because of their smaller numbers), to the Jewish enclaves in Western Europe, and the Scandinavian countries. As for the Jews of Latin American countries, they, far more than most Jewish settlements elsewhere, have very compelling reasons to speedily build and strengthen their bridges with Israel . . .

Or take the case of Soviet Jewry. It may be justifiably doubted whether the militant, heroic struggle of the vanguard of the three million Jews in the USSR would have achieved as much as it did without the world-wide moral and political support that it received from world Jewry and its liberal non-Jewish friends. But without the inspiration of Israel the present battle of Soviet Jewry, against the Kremlin's policy of enforced assimilation would never have commenced.

No one who knows anything about the resurgence of Jewish national consciousness in Russia will question this observation of mine. The survival of Israel is, in reality, a pre-condition for the national survival of the three million Jews in the USSR. I'm sorry if this sounds too extremist a view to some readers, but I have no illusions about the fate of Soviet Jewry with things being as they are in the USSR.

And so I come to the conclusion that Israel must be our chief priority in the New Year. What of the troubling problems of education, welfare, the generation gap etc. etc. at home? I am confident that even as secondary priorities these nagging problems in Canada, the U.S. and elsewhere in the West, will not be overly neglected. At any rate we shall be able to make up in the years ahead, for what we may have neglected now. That's it -- we have a second and a third chance to catch up with ourselves. Israel's crisis, on the other hand, cannot be put on ice; its solution may not be postponable . . .

Finally, we will have historic missions to fulfil in the year ahead -- our people in Israel and we here -- on the financial, political and moral levels in the year 5735. History has shaped our tasks for us and we must not fail.

So, a Happy New Year to all of you in this country and to our kith and kin in hard-pressed Israel.

May the New Year bring lasting peace to the Jewish state and all its neighbors and peace and goodwill to all of mankind.

P.S. Uncle Eliezer, too, wants to extend a Shana Tovah greeting to all children of the tribe of Israel here and elsewhere, but especially to those who dwell on Bathurst Street and its environs.

Letter to the Editor

Rabbi Monson paid tribute for his deeds

Dear Editor:

I recently had the pleasure of sitting at the same table with Rabbi David Monson, at a CNE Director's Luncheon "Salute to our Senior Citizens." I watched his reaction to John Diefenbaker's stirring address on aging. The admiration and love that he has for this great Canadian is only matched by his love and devotion to the Jewish community and the state of Israel.

When John Diefenbaker strode away from the head-table, beseiged as he was by admirers, he came upon the outstretched hand of Rabbi Monson, his friend. His eyes mirrored the warmth and esteem that he holds for the Rabbi.

I am not a member of the rabbi's congregation, but since the days when he first arrived in Toronto from Ottawa, he has made a great contribution to Jewish life here in Toronto. I remember most vividly as a teenager (over 30 years ago) his stirring address before the German war, in the basement of Shaarei Shomayim on St. Clair Ave., alerting our community to the onslaught in Germany. Most of us teenagers, in those days, bent on having a good time, paid little heed to his exhortations. Some of us, did not or would not believe the awful happenings that he brought to our attention that Sunday night.

After the war, when it became evident that we had to help the survivors of Hitler reach Palestine, against the might of the British and the Arabs, we formed an organization called, The Canadian League for a Free Palestine, to speed aid to those gallant underground fighters of the Irgun. When most rabbi's ran for cover during this most critical time in Jewish history, Rabbi David Monson was one of our most active supporters.

I think the rabbi's greatest contributions to our community is his never ending commitment to help Jews whether in Israel or in Toronto. It is a constant love affair. For the many, many thousands of visits to hospitals, for his many many acts of kindness to all Jews whether members of his congregation or not, and for his great concern as a Canadian to do what he can to make our country, Canada, a better place to live, he has my undying gratitude.

We own him a "night" of honor.

Before the fast

Tips for erev Yom Kippur meal

Although Yom Kippur, the holiest day of the Jewish Year, is primarily associated with the solemn fast, certain foods and culinary customs have also become linked to it.

The eve of Yom Kippur is treated in many respects like the Sabbath. Good eating is mandatory, not only in order to prepare for the fast but to honor the day itself, called the Sabbath of Sabbaths. The 'seudah mafseket,' the final meal taken before the fast, is characterized by an atmosphere of solemnity but not sombreness. While there should be an absence of levity, the atmosphere is not mournful. Candles are lit as on the Sabbath and the table is festively set.

Marcia Kretzmer

Fish is generally avoided at this meal. It is held that the bones may cause choking. Another possible explanation might be that fish is eaten prior to Tisha B'Av, which is a sombre and mournful fast.

Among Ashkenazim, Kreplach, dumplings made of dough-encased chopped meat, are eaten. The explanation for eating kreplach rests on Cabbalistic lore. The whiteness of the dough is said to represent the divine attribute of mercy, and the redness of the meat within, represents the divine attribute of judgment. Hence kreplach as a whole represent the idea of justice tempered with mercy.

Kreplach are also eaten on Hoshannah Rabbah, at the end of Succoth, and the symbolism changes subtly to denote the idea of our fate being inscribed and sealed as the meat is sealed within the dough. Curiously, they are also eaten on Purim, and instead of being shaped like little parcels, they are pinched into triangles like Hamentaschen.

Rebbetzin Millicent Drebin, principal of the Beth Jacob elementary school in Toronto, told me about kreplach and showed me how to make them at about 9 a.m. one day shortly before the beginning of the school year, in between numerous telephone calls from the school office.

Chicago-born Rebbetzin Drebin says that her special brand of kreplach are probably derived from Russia, although her parents are "real Yankee," she said. "They came to North America in 1884."

"In our family (they have three children) kreplach are a big hit. I make enough for about 10 each. We eat them in the soup, out of the soup -- that's our particular meshugass," says Rebbetzin Drebin. "The dough is easiest to work if two tablespoons of water are added for each egg. This they don't have in the cookbooks -- this I learned from my mother," she explains.

Rebbetzin Drebein's Holiday Kreplach

the filling:	the dough:
1 lb. chuck beef or or neck meat	4 eggs
1 med. onion	8 tbsps. water
1 egg	3-4 cups flour
1/2 cup stock
salt & pepper

1. cook meat in plenty of water (use later for meat soup) and grind meat
2. pulverize onion in blender and mix with meat together with one egg. Add seasoning and broth to moisten
3. beat the eggs and water together in another mixing bowl and add enough flour to make a workable, soft dough
4. roll out and cut into 2-inch squares. Place one heaping teaspoon of meat in each square and enclose, pinching sides together
5. place in a large pot full of boiling, salted water and cook for 40 minutes
6. drain kreplach well and place on a baking sheet. Smear with oil, sprinkle with paprika and place under the broiler for 3 minutes till browned

The conclusion of Yom Kippur ushers in an especially festive evening. First of all there is confidence that ones prayers have ascended to heaven. Second, despite the attention given to Yom Kippur as a day of affliction it was, in the days of the Second Temple, considered the greatest of festivals.

It is related that the daughters of Jerusalem would go forth garbed in white to dance in the vinyards and seek suitors. It is customary after breaking the fast to hammer in the first staves of the Succah, indicating joy in the cycle of observances.

A Persian dish for breaking the fast, given to me by Chahine Levine of Toronto, uses coarsely-grated eating apples, mixed with crushed ice, vanilla and rose-water.

But somewhat heartier fare for those who are planning to hammer in the first staves of the Succah (or dance in the vineyards) is the English post-fast meal. Starting with a glass of club soda, slices of bread and butter are eaten with schmaltz herring and washed down with innumerable cups of strong, British tea. Later, the family sits down to a cold supper of fried fish, chrane, a variety of light salads -- coleslaw, potato salad, green salad. A fruit dessert, lekach, and of course, more tea, round off the meal.

Croll urges lobby for senior citizens

By ROCHELLE CARR

TORONTO -

Senator David Croll advised the members of the Toronto Lodge of B'nai B'rith and the 17 associated Jewish Senior Citizens clubs of Toronto to organize a lobby in Ottawa.

"Farmers do it, labor and management does it. They have a voice in government. We older people have strength. We ought to be sure that we are heard too," said the 74-year-old senator.

Reminiscing to the attentive audience of over 150 people, he noted that Canadian people seem to like to go into any enterprise very slowly. Thus, the way to deal with the problems of the elderly, like income, health, loneliness and lack of activity, is "to open the door to solutions and then enlarge on them."

To emphasize Canadian unwillingness to plunge forward, he cited the example of medicare which took half a century to come about. He recalled his disappointment when, in 1927, the old age pension bill passed the House of Commons but not the Senate. As he looked back, with almost a sense of disbelief, he reminded the audience that when the bill was finally passed many Canadians felt it was undignified to apply for old age pension until a man of the stature of Louis St. Laurent did so, publicly.

The dapper looking senator reminisced with the audience about his own political career. He recalled his first public office in 1930 as mayor of Windsor, his appointment as the first Jewish cabinet minister in Ontario in 1934 and his appointment as the first Jew to the Canadian Senate in 1955.

Rabbis join with Christian clergymen in picketing Yorkdale supermarket

By RUTH KAHANE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO –
The Toronto Board of Rabbis officially demonstrated last week that they endorse the United Farmworkers' boycott of California lettuce and grapes by marching, picketing, and singing in a peaceful protest outside Yorkdale Mall's Dominion Store. They joined forces with about 50 other clergymen.

For about two hours, yarmelked and white-collared men wearing sandwich signs and carrying UFW flags, marched outside the entrance to the mall, and distributed information leaflets to shoppers. To the tune of a guitar, the group sang traditional union and spiritual tunes. Shoppers accepted the leaflets, a few began marching with the group, and several people watched from inside the mall and discussed the issue.

At a pre-march meeting at Holy Blossom Temple, representatives of the rabbis' group (Reform, Conservative, Orthodox), various Christian denominations, and the farmers' boycott group from California, spoke about the importance of religious leaders being "visible" and "communicating" on this political issue, because it will help end social injustice.

"Biblical and post-Biblical tradition commands that we must not oppress or exploit the poor. We must prove the integrity of our religious commitment by participating in the social wheel," Rabbi W. Gunther Plaut of Holy Blossom Temple said. "The UFW boycott is based on a question of morality and justice. Morality has no boundaries -- it is not bound to Canadian or Jewish identity."

"This march is a case of men of God co-operating for something just," said Rabbi Arthur Bielfeld of Temple Emmanu-el. He is the representative of the Board of Rabbis on the Inter-faith Council (a clergy group that comes together on matters of social concern).

"This is a non-parochial issue but it would undermine the essence of Judaism, if we were seduced by the type of rationale that said we should not show our concern," he said.

Marshall Ganz, co-ordinator of the farmers' boycott in Ontario, who comes from Bakersfield, Calif., worked with the Toronto Board of Rabbis on planning the demonstration. He began working with the leader of the UFW, Caesar Chavez, in 1965, three years after Chavez started organizing farmworkers in the U.S. to change their working conditions and exploitation by grape-growers.

"This march is the beginning of a close relationship between the Jewish community and the oppressed workers of the UFW," Ganz told The Canadian Jewish News.

In the United States this link has been maintained for several years. For example, in Cincinatti, a rabbinical court declared the law of "Oshek" would apply to California grapes and lettuce. In other words, these foods, being the fruits of the labor of exploited workers, were declared non-kosher, and unfit for consumption.

"This is the first time since the hey-day of the Civil Rights movement that all the denominations have joined together. This is significant for us and Toronto. We are pleased and grateful," said Ganz, the son of a Bakersfield rabbi.

Toronto is the third largest grape-market city in North America, Montreal the fifth. Five major supermarket companies import the products to Ontario, with Dominion Stores being the largest retail outlet. During October and November, 60-70% of the grapes and lettuce imported during the year will be marketed. "The struggle rests on what people shopping in the supermarket do now," Ganz told the interfaith boycott supporters.

Must convert to Judaism

JERUSALEM (JCNS) –
Members of the Falasha community of Ethiopia must undergo full conversion to Judaism if they wish to emigrate to Israel, Haim Zadok, the acting minister of religious affairs, has told the Knesset. There are between 20,000 and 25,000 Falashas in Ethiopia.

Zadok, who was replying to a question, quoted the views on the Halacha of Israel's two chief rabbis, Rabbi Shlomo Goren and Rabbi Ovadia Yosef. The minister said Rabbi Goren had expressed "grave doubts regarding the Falashas' identity," and Rabbi Yosef had referred to "the possibility of their intermarriage with non-Jews."

Zadok also told the Knesset the ministry of religious affairs had no special department with responsibility for the Falashas. Falasha issues, he said, were handled by the ministry's department for relations with the Diaspora.

In February 1973, Chief Rabbi Yosef gave a rabbinic ruling that the Falashas of Ethiopia were Jews. He wrote to Ovadia Hazi, the representative of some of the Jews of Ethiopia in Israel, that he accepted their claim that they were the descendants of the Tribe of Dan. He quoted a number of eminent religious authorities who had earlier ruled the Falashas were Jews. These included the late Rabbi Avraham Kook, Ashkenazi chief rabbi of Palestine, and the late Rabbi Itzhak Herzog, Ashkenazi chief rabbi of Israel.

Women's organizations

'Most aggressive Bond campaign ever'

Rabbi Plaut Addresses Hadassah—WIZO Leaders

Demonstrating their awareness of the crushing financial burdens which are being carried by the people of Israel as they struggle to overcome the results of the war last year, Toronto women have willingly undertaken to ease those burdens by raising more bond dollars for the Israeli economy. They are doing this both as individuals, and as members of the major women's organizations in the community which are engaged in the most aggressive bond campaigns ever undertaken in this city. The same motivation is shared by all, regardless of their affiliation -- to help ensure Israel's survival by the most practical means available to every Jewish woman, her own Israel Bond purchase.

Toronto Hadassah-WIZO Presidents and Israel Bond chairwomen were addressed by Rabbi Dr. W. Gunther Plaut at their 1974 Campaign Launching held at the home of Mrs. James Kay. Every chapter will undertake a bond program which includes canvassing each member for her own bond enrollment, over and above her family purchase. These are the "plus" dollars which are testimony to the growing role of the women's division in the overall bond structure in Toronto.

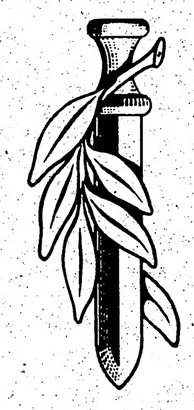
Friends, Family Fete Mrs. Max Sharp, Pioneer Woman Of Year

A "pioneer" in both Toronto Pioneer Women and State of Israel Bonds, Mrs. Max Sharp will be honored at a Tribute Dinner sponsored by Pioneer Women to take place on Thursday, October 17th, at Beth Torah Synagogue. This will be the focal point of their 1974 bond campaign. In recognition of Mrs. Sharp's exceptional achievements on Israel's behalf, bond purchases in her honor by members and friends have already exceeded previous figures. As a prelude to the Tribute Dinner, Mrs. Sharp was feted by her husband and children at a gala birthday dinner at the Inn on the Park attended by several hundred relatives and friends where more than $142,000 in Israel Bonds was subscribed in her honor.

Sponsors To Hear Specialist On War-bereaved Families

Sponsor luncheons of the Women's Division are noted for the calibre of guest speakers who come here from Israel and other countries to address the pace-setters of the Toronto women's bond campaign. The special guest at the October 31st luncheon will be the famed Israeli psychotherapist and educator, Dr. Erika Landau. Dr. Landau leads a special program set up after the Yom Kippur War to work with the bereaved families, helping them to cope with problems of adjustment, and is the author of a new book on this subject. She also has written several books dealing with gifted children. The luncheon is being hosted by Mrs. Herbert Green and Mrs. Al Silverberg at the home of the latter, 90 Old Colony Road. This event will serve also as an occasion for the awarding of the 1974 Sponsor Pin, to women purchasers of Israel Bonds at the levels of $1,000 and over.

Lapel pin gains attention



A small but very significant lapel pin being proudly worn by many members of our community has been attracting a great deal of interest since its arrival here several weeks ago. It is the insignia of Israel's Defense Forces and signifies the enrollment of the wearer as a member of a Shomer Israel Family -- "Guardians of Israel."

"HaShomer" refers to the original association of Jewish watchmen in Eretz Israel, active between 1909 and 1920. Founded by pioneers of the Second Aliyah, they were the first body in the Zionist movement and the Jewish "Yishuv" which believed that the existence of an organized Jewish armed force would be a decisive factor in the realization of the Zionist dream. Its example was an inspiration to the pioneering youth movements, and to the Haganah which joined with the former Ha Shomer defense forces to defend the Jewish Homeland during the mandate. They were raised from underground status to become the regular army of the State by David Ben-Gurion when independence was proclaimed in 1948.

The 1974 Israel Bond Campaign is striving to enroll every Jewish family as a Shomer Israel Family, Guardians of Israel, through the purchase of Israel Bonds to the value of $1,000 or more.

Dr. Irving H.J. Glass and his family are typical of what being Shomrei Israel really means. Their commitment to Israel is in every way deeply sincere, genuine, and consistent. Despite a busy professional life as a pediatrician, Dr. Glass has nonetheless undertaken to be co-chairman of the Medical Division of the Israel Bond Campaign, serving with Drs. Sol Goldstein and Harold Langer in a special project involving Toronto physicians. Five of the six children in the Glass family attend the Associated Hebrew School (Samuel, the eldest, has graduated), and are all very aware of Israel, and of the family purchases of Israel Bonds as "an investment in the land for them and for us," as Mrs. Lucy Glass, their mother puts it. An immediate example is set for all the Glass family by grandmother Esther Glass, an active member of the Beth Sholom Bond Committee, and the Women's Division. Her annual Chanukah purchase of bonds for "the einiklach" is another family tradition.

The story of Israel Bonds is said to be so well known as to need no retelling. Nevertheless, retold it must be owing to its unique character, and the dramatic importance of the Bonds for this country's economic survival and development. In this year of increased military expenditure and rising costs of most raw materials, Bonds have become a life-line.

The Bonds are often lumped together with the funds raised by world Jewry for our national institutions, as just another form of aid to Israel. But it should be recalled that the underlying idea was different, and spelt the emergence of Israel as an economically viable unit. It marked a new departure, ending dependence on gifts and paving the way for a more businesslike approach.

The issue of the first Independence Bonds in 1951 was opposed in many quarters as an impossible project, because Jews would donate funds to Israel but never allow it to become part of their investments. Now, a quarter of a century later, Bonds and donations run about neck and neck, at about $500m. each.

The money put into the Bonds is not donated but lent to the State of Israel, at an interest rate that is modest in comparison with those currently prevailing in the world capital market. And it is repaid in due time like any commercial debt. Indeed, in recent years, repayments accounted for about one-third of the sums raised by the Bond's annual campaigns. The market quotations of Israel Bonds have been better than those of many states bigger and richer than Israel.

The faith of world Jews in Israel's financial performance can therefore be said to have stood the test of time, while the funds thus accumulated provided our economy with the long-term, relatively cheap capital needed for basic investment. We could afford to increase our foreign debt on this scale, which is larger than that of most developing countries, because we would resort to a friendly and fairly stable source of finance, and the resulting debt service was not too burdensome.

The material on this page and the page opposite was prepared and paid for by Israel Bonds.

Rabbi Pappenheim to be honored

On Tuesday evening, October 29th, B'nai Israel Beth David Congregation will tender an affectionate salute to their revered spiritual leader, Rabbi Albert Pappenheim on his "Chai" anniversary with the synagogue. In keeping with the noteworthy devotion to Israel of leaders and members alike, the Tribute Dinner in Rabbi Pappenheim's honor will also climax the congregation's most intensive Israel Bond campaign ever.

A beloved and respected figure throughout the community, and currently president of the Toronto Board of Rabbis, Rabbi Pappenheim has had a dynamic impact on the members of his congregation. B'nai Israel Beth David has produced many prominent leaders in the Toronto Israel Bond campaigns over the years, as well as very substantial Israel Bond purchases by its members. To ensure the maximum success of the dinner, an enlarged Tribute Committee has been formed which includes all past presidents of the synagogue as well as the brotherhood and sisterhood, and other leaders. Numerous parlor meetings will precede the dinner itself, hosted by friends and congregants. On October 3rd, Rabbi Pappenheim will host a special "L'Chayim Tribute Committee Meeting."

Rabbi Erwin E. Schild of Adath Israel Synagogue will serve as master-of-ceremonies at the Tribute Dinner. Featured speaker will be Jacob Stein, eminent Jewish leader who is the immediate past-president of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, a Member of the Board of Overseers of the Jewish Theological Seminary and of the Governing Council of the American Jewish Congress, and honorary president of the United Synagogues of America.

Bonds, Adath Israel tribute

Extons to be feted at dinner

One of the most outstanding and dedicated couples in the Toronto Jewish Community will be honoured at a Testimonial Dinner on Thursday evening, October 24th, it was announced today by Jack Israeli, General Chairman of Israel Bonds and David Feldman, President of Adath Israel Synagogue. Eric and Esther Exton whose influence and leadership have been felt with far-reaching impact in the city of Toronto, across Canada and in the State of Israel, will be tendered a Tribute Dinner by their congregation, Adath Israel, in co-operation with State of Israel Bonds. The community-wide event has already set a precedent, with the involvement of the leadership of the many organizations, agencies and causes with which the Extons have been affiliated and provided leadership. Included are Abe Posluns, Chairman of the Board of Baycrest Centre and Mrs. Wolf Goldberg, President of its Women's Auxiliary; Max Shecter, Regional President of the Canadian Zionist Federation; Max Goody, past President of the Zionist Organization of Canada; Marvin Meretsky, President of the Toronto Regional Council of B'nai B'rith and E. James Cooper, immediate past President of B'nai B'rith District 22; Mrs. Sharon Mann, President of B'nai B'rith Women's Council; Phil Granovsky, President of the United Jewish Welfare Fund; Lou Ronson, head of the League of Human Rights; Morris King, President of Eglinton Lodge; and Murray Morgan and Harold Kay of the Society of the Ontario Mortgage Brokers Association.

Eric & Esther Exton

Victor Shields is Chairman and Mrs. John Daniels is Associate Chairman of the Committee which includes many men and women from all walks of community life as well as a substantial number from the Sisterhood, Men's Club and membership of the Congregation. Spearheading the arrangements and fund-raising activity in connection with the dinner is the Synagogue's Bond Committee headed by Alvin Dickstein, Congregation Bond Chairman. Rabbi Irwin Schild, spiritual leader of Adath Israel, has been consultant and guiding force to the Tribute Committee and hosted its first meeting at his home.

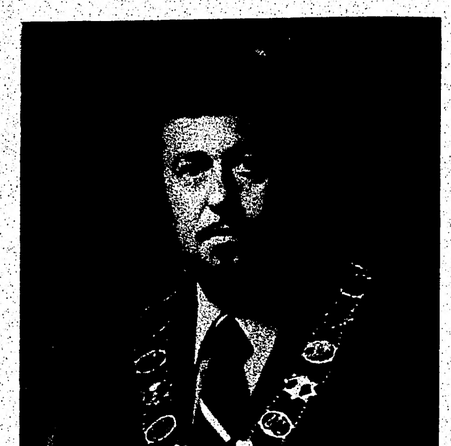
Among those who will be hosting parlour meetings for special groups in the weeks preceding the Testimonial Dinner are Mr. and Mrs. Victor Shields, Mr. and Mrs. Abe Posluns, Marvin Meretsky, James Cooper and Cyril Houser, and Murray Morgan and Harold Kay.

Eric Exton is currently President of the Canadian Friends of Boys Town, Jerusalem, President of the Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care, Treasurer of the Zionist Organization of Canada, Chairman of the Pension Committee of the United Jewish Welfare Fund, and has served as past President of the Jewish National Fund, Toronto Region; Toronto B'nai B'rith Regional Council and numerous other posts in B'nai B'rith. He serves as a Board Member in many community organizations and is the recipient of the George Shnier Memorial Award. Prominent as well in the business and financial community, Eric Exton currently serves as President of Seel Investments Ltd., Seel Enterprises Ltd., and Lese Holdings Ltd., and was recently elected president of the Society of Accredited Mortgage Brokers for the Province of Ontario.

Mrs. Exton has played a role of dedicated service and leadership in all phases of B'nai B'rith activities, as well as in the work of Israel Bonds from the time the Women's Division was first organized in Toronto. She has also fulfilled numerous successful chairmanships with the Baycrest Women's Auxiliary. She has been active as well in the Federation of Jewish Women's Organization in Toronto.

The Extons were invited to Israel last January to take part in the Israel Bond Prime Minister's Conference. In March the first official fund-raising function of the 1974 campaign was held in their home in conjunction with the telephonic hook-up from Miami which launched the North American Israel Bond drive.

Persons wishing more information about the dinner should contact the synagogue, 635-5340.



North York Mayor Mel Lastman

Lastman event sparks buyers

The community spotlight will shine brightly on North York Mayor Mel Lastman on the occasion of the International Inter-Faith Testimonial Dinner in his honor which will bring together civic dignitaries, representatives of numerous communal organizations and leaders from the business world on Sunday evening, September 22, at the Four Seasons Sheraton Hotel. They will join in a common cause to advance Israel's economic development program through Israel Bonds. Under the co-sponsorship of Bad Boy Appliances and Furniture Ltd. of which Mel Lastman is founder and president, this corporate event has sparked the enthusiastic participation of companies throughout the appliance and furniture industries.

To date, the results measured in terms of Israel Bond purchases have been outstanding and this can be directly credited to the series of advance bond receptions hosted by friends and associates in Mel Lastman's honor. The Corporate Program, first initiated in 1971, has already resulted in the sale in the U.S. and Canada of more than $100 million in Israel Bonds to help finance major Israeli development projects.

Ambassador Moshe Leshem, Israel's envoy to Denmark, is flying to Toronto especially to address the gathering in honor of Mayor Lastman. An outstanding member of Israel's diplomatic corps, Ambassador Leshem has represented his country with great effectiveness in many key posts around the world, and served for six years as Israel's Ambassador Plenipotentiary at the United Nations.

The Testimonial Dinner honoring Mayor Lastman will serve as the occasion for the presentation to him of the rarely-bestowed International Inter-Faith Honour Scroll "in recognition of his devoted service to his community and to humanitarian causes on behalf of people of all faiths; of his leadership in government and of his selfless role in spurring economic support for Israel as a bulwark of democracy in the Middle East."

Principal participants in the planning and implementation of the Lastman dinner include Jack Friedman, Q.C., Dinner Chairman; Erving Ehrlick, Tribute Committee Chairman; Allen C. Lastman, C.A., Co-ordinating Chairman; Ronald K. Lansing and Ben S. Mandell, Co-chairmen, Management Committee Douglas Bassett, Rabbi Dr. David Monson, Gerald Shefsky, Stanley J. Randall, and G.S. MacDonell.

Must stand together with Israel; lend more support than ever before

On the first anniversary of the Yom Kippur War, we have to remember the awesome sacrifices that the people of Israel made and are continuing to make for the defense and survival of the Jewish State. Only if we remember, can we properly judge the impact of the first tentative steps in easing the tensions in the Middle East on the long road to peace.

Israel's neighbours from the day of its formation have planned and tried to carry out the elimination of the State and did so again last October for the fifth time.

Were they successful it would have meant the realization of Hitler's plan to annihilate Jewry totally.

Were they successful the world would have had lots of sympathetic post-mortem, but only post-mortem, just the same as in 1945.

Jewry cannot turn the page on this most horrible possitibility. We must open our eyes and look clearly into the face of such a future. We must mobilize all our resources and talent to avert such a calamity. We must stand together on the side of Israel and support it now more than ever before. We must never again make ourselves vulnerable to the possibility of disaster.

Jack Israeli confers in Jerusalem with Avraham Agmon, Director-General of the Ministry of Finance.

If we read history correctly, we must realize that never before has Israel's economic development been as decisive as now for the survival of the country, for the restoration of the pace of national production, and for the fulfillment of Israel's mission as the homeland for the many thousands of new immigrants from the Soviet Union and other countries seeking freedom and an opportunity to create a constructive and meaningful life in Israel.

The future of Israel depends not only on the tremendous sacrifices which the people of Israel are making, but also on us, on our faith and solidarity in carrying the burden of Israel's development program. The new year summons us to stand shoulder to shoulder with the people of Israel and to give them the economic strength to turn the first phase of peace negotiations into the concrete reality of a fair and lasting peace settlement.

The call to all Jews to enroll in the Israel Bond program on this first anniversary of the outbreak of the Yom Kippur War commands us to give solid and historic evidence of our undiminished commitment to Israel's welfare and growth.

Torah mantle reminds us of those who fell in battle defending Israel's freedom

A Torah Mantle made in Israel to memorialize the first anniversary of the Yom Kippur War will be awarded to synagogues in the United States and Canada.

It bears a Hebrew inscription commemorating the close to 3,000 Israeli soldiers who fell in defense of Israel during the Yom Kippur War. In the upper portion of the Torah Mantle is the official seal of the State of Israel, while underneath the Hebrew inscription is the phrase: "Presented in Appreciation — State of Israel Bonds."

A significant reminder of the heroic struggle and sacrifice for Israel's survival, the Torah Mantle will also symbolize for each synagogue the the faith and determination of its members to strengthen and preserve the State of Israel by enrolling as Shomrei Israel through the purchase of $1,000 or more in Israel Bonds.

Congregations provide major thrust

Intensive High Holy Day Bond effort to protect Israel's freedom

$13 million raised is springboard for massive support

Toronto's 47 congregations will provide the major thrust of support as the 1974 Israel Bond campaign moves into its second major stage. General Chairman Jack Israeli, has announced that the first phase of Toronto State of Israel Bonds had raised $13,000,000 during the Spring and early Summer, "a magnificent achievement from a limited number of pacesetters and community leaders who have set so heartening an example" of support for our people. The destiny of the final effort now lies in the hands of the rabbis, presidents, bond chairmen and members of all of Toronto's temples and synagogues.

Appeals will be held in every congregation on Yom Kippur -- Kol Nidre or at Yizkor. Immediately following there will be ten days of rededication culminating with the National day of Rededication on Sunday, October 6th. At that time, members of the community will be asked to go to their synagogue -- the one they belong to or the one in their neighborhood, to redeem with cheques pledges made on Yom Kippur.

Families with no synagogue affiliation will be canvassed separately on October 6th to enlist their support.

Highlight of this, the first Bond campaign following the Yom Kippur War, will be increasing the level of participation. "Every family should enroll in the Shomrei Yisrael -- Guardians of Israel -- by a minimum purchase of $1,000," Synagogue Co-Chairmen Alex Eisen, Nathan Hurwich and Dr. Norman Shaul stressed "Israel's needs in this critical hour demand that the least we can do is lend a month's income or $1,000. "Israelis have had new taxes imposed, special assessments and compulsory and voluntary loans to the extent that the majority are in marginal circumstances. With our incomparably higher standard of living -- to say nothing of the safety and security of our homes -- this sacrifice on our part is hardly too much to ask," they declared.

Further synagogue activity will be evidenced in October or early November with dinners at Adath Israel, B'nai Israel Beth David, Beth Torah, and others (reported on elsewhere in this issue).

Paralleling the synagogue activity will be several functions, solicitations and parlour meetings under the auspices of B'nai B'rith. Among the lodges engaged in raising Bond dollars are Upper Canada, Yorkdale, Sportsmens, Wilson Heights, Leonard Mayzel and North York. A dozen other lodges will be joining with Sportsmens Lodge on Sunday evening, October 27th in paying tribute to the Armed Forces of Israel. An award of appreciation will be presented to one of its outstanding officers, Major General Avraham Adan, who will be travelling to Toronto for the tribute to his comrades.

The Women's Division, under the chairpersonship of Mrs. Donald Lipman, will be in high gear. The Sponsor Luncheon on Thursday, October 31st hosted by Mrs. Herbert Green and Mrs. Al Silverberg, Pioneer Women Testimonial Dinner to Mrs. Max Sharp and Special Event Teas are expected to boost the women's plus dollars past the $2,000,000 mark.

Two Corporate Dinners, one to Mayor Mel Lastman, co-sponsored by Bad Boy Appliances and Furniture Limited this coming Sunday at the Four Seasons Hotel and one honoring Irwin Goldhart, co-sponsored by Automotive Hardware Inc. on October 20th, are expected to enlist the support of many first-time purchasers including non-Jewish friends of Israel, in addition to those members of the Jewish community who have been traditional investors.

The Professional Division activity will be sparked at functions by the Medical Division on October 19th and the Lawyers' Division on November 3rd. Convening for the first time in several years, the Physicians' function is headed by Dr. Sol Goldstein, Dr. Irving Glass and Dr. Howard Langer. Phineas Schwartz and Gus Weinstein are chairing the Lawyers' group.

Large group represented city

Toronto was represented by one of the largest delegations attending the International Leadership Conference of the Israel Bond Organization held in Canada for the first time. Held in Montreal from September 6-8, the conference was attended by more than 30 leaders of the Toronto bond drive. Altogether 750 delegates from the United States and Canada met to plan new efforts for providing massive economic aid to Israel at this time of grave danger for the Israeli economy. Shimon Peres, Israel's Minister of Defense made a special trip to Montreal to participate in the Conference, and was principal speaker and guest of honor at the dinner session on Saturday evening. He told the delegates that a strong economy is Israel's best guarantee for peace. "Financial instability," he said, "leads to war."

Other members of the Toronto delegation included Mr. and Mrs. Max Shecter and daughter; Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Hurwich, Mr. and Mrs. Ben A. Himel, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Frank, Alex Eisen, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bick, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Godfrey, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Kaporovsky, Dr. and Mrs. Avraham Avi-Hai, Consul-General Shmuel Ovnat, and James Senor.

Milton Seidenman, Chairman of the International B'nai B'rith Israel Bond Committee came from Washington to confer with Toronto B'nai B'rith Bond leaders, lodge presidents and Bond chairmen on their 1974 campaign plans, and the need for maximum loan funds for Israel. Shown here, left to right, are Jack Israeli, General Chairman, Toronto Israel Bonds; Milton Seidenman, Hy Lampert, and Harry J. Pachter, Co-Chairmen, Israel Bond Cabinet of Toronto B'nai B'rith.

Israel's morale is strengthened following war

"The Yom Kippur War was a confrontation between democracy and dictatorship, where armies were in control of nations, not nations in control of armies ... Israel is awakening to a new feeling, a change in morale. They know they are facing new dangers, but today they are better prepared and stronger in mind than ever before ... (On negotiations) Israel is willing to give up a piece of land for a piece of peace." The continued solidarity of Jews everywhere with Israel is of the utmost importance to us, and time is of the essence in strengthening our economy as the pursuit of an enduring peace continues."

Shimon Peres

Rabbi Dr. David Monson participated in the launching of the Bond campaign of Toronto B'nai B'rith Women when he was guest speaker at the seminar for presidents and Bond chairwomen held at the home of Mrs. Eric Exton, Bond chairwoman for Toronto B'nai B'rith Women. Shown, left to right, are Rabbi Monson, Mrs. Warren Mann, President of Toronto B'nai B'rith Women's Council; Mrs. Exton, and Mrs. Jacques Barruch, Chairman, Israel Projects, B'nai B'rith Women District 22.

Firm will sponsor dinner for president in aid of campaign

Automotive Hardware Limited will demonstrate its support of the Israel Bond campaign the "corporate way," when it sponsors a dinner on October 20th, to pay tribute to its Chairman of the Board and President, Irwin Goldhart. In addition to his prominent position in industry, Mr. Goldhart also plays an important role in a wide variety of communal and humanitarian endeavors and as an outstanding advocate of economic support for Israel through Israel Bond investments. In this difficult year of transition and crisis for Israel, the growing role being played by business corporations and their leaders in mobilizing economic aid for the State takes on crucial importance. The automotive hardware and related industries are joining the ranks of participating major Canadian corporations this year for the first time as this new aspect of the Israel Bond program expands its scope within Canada. above is item 11

B'nai B'rith...

Maintains momentum

Ways and means to keep up the high momentum of support achieved last year by the B'nai B'rith Israel Bond Campaign is a matter which deeply concerns the leaders and members of Toronto B'nai B'rith. To this end, new programs of activities are being introduced which will involve the direct participation of nearly every lodge and chapter within the metropolitan Toronto area.

A new pilot project underway in Sportsmen Lodge exemplifies the two-way "helping" approach whereby senior lodges combine with smaller, younger lodges which cannot undertake a major Israel Bond event on their own, and which at the same time want to take as productive a part as they can in raising bond dollars for Israel. Sixteen smaller lodges are joining together with Sportsmen at a special bond event to take place Saturday evening, October 12th as a salute to Israel's Defense Forces.

B'nai B'rith Women have set their sights this year on a "total involvement" concept for all their chapter memberships, with special bond programs, speakers, bond-clubs, and activities geared to enrolling every member as a bond-buyer.

Ray of hope assured for Olim

If there is any single factor which is particularly difficult for the American oleh to digest it is the right of building contractors to escalate the price of an apartment during construction linked to increases in building costs. This means that, except for the rarest of exceptions, chances are the price stipulated in the contract signed before commencement of construction has no bearing on what the final figures will amount to. To drive the point home in concrete terms, suffice it to say that an apartment which was signed for in December 1972 cost 23% more by December 1973 -- assuming that it was completed by then. If it was not yet finished chances are it went up even higher than that.

According to an article in the authoritative daily Haaretz of May 13, 1974, "The prices on apartments in choice areas of Tel Aviv have gone up in recent weeks to the point whereby a single room now costs between 90-100,000 Israeli pounds." In other words a two room apartment now goes for I.L. 200,000.

"In nearby Rishon LeZion, considered an inexpensive locale, the term 'inexpensive' is evidently very relative: 3 1/2 rooms are now running for I.L. 150,000 and four rooms are over I.L. 170,000."

The only way to avoid the price increases is by dealing with one of those contractors who are willing to avoid linking the price to the index in exchange for an advance of 75% of the apartments costs prior to construction.

Olim Not To Be Neglected

A ray of hope, however, is assured for olim in an article in the Jerusalem Post in which the new Housing Minister Avraham Ofer emphasizes that "there will be no slowdown in construction of housing for immigrants, young couples, or slum evacuees despite anti-inflationary methods about to be imposed which would curb the rate of construction throughout Israel.

Mr. Ofer said 16,000 housing solutions would be required for immigrants during the year. Of this number, 12,000 are to be provided in the form of new apartments to be built by the ministry. The remainder of the newcomers are expected to find solutions by buying used apartments with the help of a Government mortgage.

"Most of the 10,000 unit backlog in immigrant housing will be overcome by the end of the next year," he said.

Eight thousand apartments are to be built for young couples and 10,000 for families living in over-crowded conditions. Mr. Ofer said the ministry was preparing a plan for rental apartments in which private contractors will receive large Government loans in order to build apartments for rental at moderate prices. The contractor will have little or no profit from the rental, but the apartment will revert to him after 15-20 years for sale."

Rental Conditions For Olim

There are already at present special apartments which have been set aside for rental to olim. The terms of rental are as follows:

1. The period of guaranteed and protected rental is 12 years from the end of construction.
2. In addition to the rental fee (as per the table below) the oleh will be responsible for all municipal taxes and running maintenance expenses including electricity, water, cleaning, gardening etc.
3. The average monthly rental will be: 1 - 3 years, I.L.300; 4 - 6 years, I.L. 400; 7 - 9 years, I.L. 450; 10 - 12 years, I.L. 550.
4. At the signing of the lease the oleh will have to put down a deposit equal to three months rent. Additionally it will be the landlord's privilege to demand guarantees for an additional six month's rent.
5. The apartments are unfurnished.
6. The oleh has no option to buy the apartments. They are for rental purposes only.
7. Five years after entry there will be a controlled and authorized revision of rents under the supervision of the Housing Ministry.
8. Rental is for a minimum of one year.
9. Upon leaving the apartment it will be the tenant's responsibility to cover improvements and repairs over and beyond natural depreciation which was caused by his negligence and he must obtain a note from the landlord that he returned the apartment in proper condition. The above expenditures, when not agreed to by the oleh, will have to first be authorized by the Housing Ministry.
10. If the oleh should wish to return the apartment after one year he is eligible for a mortgage towards the purchase of an apartment on the private market provided he is still enjoying his period of benefits.

New Apartments Allocated for Olim

For olim who are still interested in purchasing apartments outright, here is a listing of appriximately 100 apartments which have been allocated for sale to olim as per the following specifications:

Two apartments of 40 Sq. M. two rooms Nazareth; two apartments of 33 Sq. M. one room Acco; two apartments of 40 Sq. M. two rooms Acco; two apartments of 73 Sq. M. three rooms Acco; two apartments of 85 Sq. M. 3 three rooms Kiriat Motzkin; seven apartments of 57 Sq. M. two rooms Lod; 24 apartments of 73 Sq. M. three rooms Ashdod; three apartments of 36 Sq. M. two rooms Beersheba; four apartments of 58 Sq. M. two rooms Beersheba; 10 apartments of 68 Sq. M. three rooms Ashkelon; nine apartments of 69 Sq. M. three rooms Kiriat Gat.

As of going to press there were also 11 apartments of various sizes in Jerusalem, among them of 32 Sq. M. with one room, 73 Sq. M. with three rooms and 64 Sq. M. with two rooms.

Occupancy for these apartments is scheduled for August.

Additionally there are now six apartments available for singles. Each apartment is comprised of three rooms each with separate entrances but with shared bath and kitchen facilities. These apartments are furnished and the kitchens come equipped with a small refrigerator and gas stoves. Each of these flats is intended for either three men or three women who are compatible in terms of age and socio-cultural background. One of these apartments is in Ashdod, one in Kiriat Yam, two in Beersheba and two in Jerusalem's Neveh Yaakov sector.

Housing Minister Avraham Ofer, who has been dropping hints in recent weeks that a Galilee site is to be developed as a major urban centre, indicated yesterday that Safad had been chosen. He said that the city, whose present population is 13,600, will grow to 100,000 in the coming generation.

Mr. Ofer has termed it vital to develop "a Beersheba of the North" to serve as a springboard for the development of the Galilee.

WE CARE!

ISRAEL IS THE HOME OF ALL THE JEWISH PEOPLE. IT OFFERS AN UNMATCHED TOTAL JEWISH COMMUNITY, A SENSE OF BELONGING WHICH, AS HISTORY HAS TAUGHT US MANY TIMES, A JEW, TRY AS HE MIGHT, COULD NEVER ACHIEVE ANYWHERE ELSE IN THE WORLD.

ACCEPT CHALLENGES OF ISRAEL AND SUCCEED.

Should state adjust to immigrants or should they adjust to new country?

By UZI NARKISS

Even in the midst of the Yom Kippur War, planes continued to land at Lod Airport and unload their human cargo. Coming home were Jewish immigrants from all over the world, devoted to the land of their fathers.

Now we have new and complex problems. Israel is faced with crucial housing shortages and construction problems. We have yet to develop accelerated building methods and have insufficient manpower in this area. Also, apartments are generally built to suit families, making integration more difficult for those immigrants -- young and old, couples, and individuals -- whose needs are different.

Another source of difficulty is employment.

The basic issue lies in the fact that more than 40% of immigrants coming to Israel are educated professionals while the country faces a shortage of physical laborers.

Moreover, Israel's policy has been one of encouraging many youngsters, especially among Oriental Jews, to go on to higher studies. It would appear that in the near future the percentage of college graduates in Israel will be one of the highest in the world. Also, Israel now welcomes immigrants who enjoyed higher standards of living in their countries of origin than in the Jewish State, and at least an equivalent level of education.

So a crucial question has been raised:

Should the State adjust itself to the new immigrants, or should the immigrants adapt themselves to the country which they have chosen? This question brings to mind the plea of the late President John F. Kennedy: "Ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country."

The moral right of the State to pose this question to the oleh will undoubtedly depend upon the extent to which it dares to ask the same of its native born.

Though certainly every professional desires to remain within his profession, among the immigrants there are those whose occupations have become outdated or bear no relation to the same professions in Israel. Furthermore, Israel is a relatively small country, and there are only a limited number of positions in any particular field. Aside from the growth of the economy, which in and of itself helps to solve economic problems, the country has undertaken a number of programs to retrain immigrants in new professions. The decision to be retrained is not an easy one for the oleh. The people undergoing retraining are not young, nor are they happy about the change, but we perceive this process to be necessary from the force of circumstance.

The desire of many immigrants to find in Israel not only a homeland, but a new life-style, has created some unconventional absorption frameworks. Many families, including scientists and independent businessmen, have been absorbed within cooperative frameworks, particularly in moshavim. They have traded in their laboratory smocks for overalls and begun working in unpolluted air, growing greenhouse flowers and vegetables. Israel's security problems have also influenced these immigrants to settle in border areas from the Sinai to the Golan Heights.

There is an additional aspect involved in the social integration on people who come on aliyah. They speak a different language, have different customs, and have become accustomed to the particular way of life of their country of origin. In Israel, they must adapt themselves to Israel's way of life, which is firmly established despite the relative youth of the country. Many of them hope to live according to the life-style to which they were accustomed, but they are unable to. And apart from all this, the immigrant must still cope with the difficult Hebrew language.

In the past many Israelis criticized the excellent benefits which new immigrants receive to help them settle in Israel, but the Yom Kippur War brought about a revolutionary change in their outlook. I spoke with many soldiers on the West Bank of the Suez Canal at the height of the Israeli Army's crossing. Confident of victory, they were interested, surprisingly, in immigration. They wanted to know if aliyah from the Soviet Union and from the United States had sufiered as a result of the War. They understood that immigration to Israel means they are not alone, that the Jews in the Diaspora continue to believe in Israel's growth and prosperity.

Israel, in her 26th year, awaits the arrival of many Jews who will immigrate of their own free will and who, when they arrive, will successfully overcome all the trials and tribulations of absorption and permanent settlement in Israel.

The exorcism scene is the climax of "The Dybbuk", currently playing at the St. Lawrence Centre. Marilyn Lightstone is the girl in the middle. John Hirsch directed this production for the Manitoba Theatre Centre. It will run through Saturday, October 12.

Lacking in spirit

Production of The Dybbuk 'disappointing' theatre

By LYNN SLOTKIN

John Hirsch's adaptation of the S. Ansky classic play, The Dybbuk, (now at the St. Lawrence Centre) has great potential, for how else could you describe a play full of Jewish custom, tradition and color. But it is a disappointment because it is so lacking in spirit -- that quality that has enabled the Jews to endure, survive and grow.

Hirsch is not entirely to blame for the lack of spirit in the work; Ansky was the initiator. In the play, Chanon, a rabbinical student loves Leah. He immerses himself in prayer and penance, praying for a miracle, that her father will arrange for the two to marry. It doesn't work. She is betrothed to someone else, and he dies of heartbreak. His tortured soul takes possession of Leah's body, and this forms the framework of the play.

In his introduction to The Great Jewish Plays (of which The Dybbuk is one) Joseph C. Landis writes "Ashkenazic Jewry (of which The Dybbuk is representative) drew and developed all that was humane, life-affirming and man-reverering." If this is so, then why is this life affirmation and man-reverence absent in Ansky's play? Why does Chanon have to die to realize his dream of being with Leah? If he loves her so much, why didn't he express his love to her, ask her father for her hand in marriage and marry her? It wasn't proper to do so, you say? Perhaps true, but it also wasn't proper to defy a father, a rabbi, a rabbinical court's decree and to some extent, G-d; four things Chanon's tormented soul did while efforts were made to exorcise it. What good is such a strong spirit in such a weak body?

Questions also arise in Hirsch's adaptation. Why has director Hirsch added such cruelty to this play? I speak of the scene before the wedding, when people push and shove to get to the food that is offered to them; when these people are in turn manhandled by the dispensers?

In the wedding scene, everyone is horrified to see that Leah is possessed; yet, in the next few moments, when she is led off, some of the more heartless guests begin dancing as if nothing happened.

Enough of the negative points. Hirsch does interesting things with Kent McKay's lighting design and Alan Laing's music, and the dancing scenes are moving.

Shimmy Plener is touching as Menashe, the shy, sensitive groom. Michael Granger is quite funny and credible as Shimon. Paul Kligman is authoritarian, jovial, and confident as Sender and brings great warmth to the part.

Marilyn Lightstone makes you forget all the negative aspects of this production. She gives a stellar performance as Leah.

The Dybbuk has its problems, but Miss Lightstone and company give it a positive edge.

A CALL FROM THE YOM KIPPUR PEACE COMMITTEE

This year Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement) will be the first anniversary of the beginning of the most recent Middle East war, and a memorial to the dead of all nations who fell in that war.

The Ten Days of Turning between Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur is a time for individuals to seek to turn themselves and all humanity toward peace and justice. For us this year it means, especially, to seek to end the bloodshed that still goes on between Israelis and Palestinians.

We will, therefore, hold a vigil on Sunday, September 22, at 1 p.m., at the Consulate of Israel, 102 Bloor St. W., and at 2 p.m., at the Arab Community Centre, 175 St. Clair Ave. W.

We appeal to the Israeli leadership and people and to the Palestinian leadership and people: Turn toward each other; stop killing each other; make peace with each other.

We ask the Palestinian leadership and people to end all acts of terror against Israeli civilians and to acknowledge that there is an Israeli-Jewish people, entitled to live in peace under its own government on its own territory.

We ask the Israeli leadership and people to end all acts of reprisal against Palestinian civilians and to acknowledge that there is a Palestinian–Arab people, entitled to live in peace under its own government on its own territory.

We ask this in memory of all those who died one year ago; we ask it in memory of all the Israeli and Palestinian children who died in the past year; we ask it for the sake of all who will die in the coming year if peace is not achieved; we ask it in the knowledge that all of us stand equally under a common judgment.

(Similar vigils will be held by Yom Kippur Peace Committees in New York and other American cities.)

If you wish to join us, call 782–0079.

All Empire brand poultry is processed under strictest rabbinical supervision, in fullest compliance with Orthodox Law, and carries the reputable ⓤ symbol of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations as your assurance the poultry is truly Kosher.

For your utmost convenience, Empire even soaks and salts the poultry before packaging, so it is completely Kosher and ready to cook without additional work in the home. And for taste, you'll enjoy the country-fresh, flavor-sealed goodness of Empire. That's because only the most wholesome, young and tender poultry, specially fed and grown, comes to Empire straight from neighboring farms.

If you want Kosher, insist on the Empire brand with the ⓤ symbol, the best quality, most wholesome, good-tasting poultry you can set before your family.

Fresh-Frozen
READY-TO-COOK
Fryers, Broilers, Roasters, Fowl, Pullets, Rock Cornish, Capons, Ducks, Turkeys
Whole, Cut-Up, Breasts, Legs, Wings.

All Empire Kosher Poultry has been inspected and passed for wholesomeness by the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture. It has been fresh-eviscerated, soaked, salted, completely Koshered, and is ready to cook (after thawing if frozen).

Seeks to improve image of Israeli-expatriates in Canada

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

TORONTO –

Shimon Schreiber, a young Israeli Torontonian, has often thought about a problem which escapes the attention of most Jews -- the serious rift that has developed between the 12-15,000 Israeli expatriates living here and the established Jewish community.

Schreiber, an athletic 26-year old realtor who immigrated to Canada some five years ago, feels somewhat frustrated because of his belief that the problem posed by the yordim is one that Canadian Jews would rather sweep under the rug than solve.

Based on numerous conversations he has had with Canadian Jews from all walks of life over the last few years, Schreiber has reached the disquieting conclusion that the Jewish community here displays an inordinate amount of resentment and some bitterness toward Israelis who leave their country and settle down in Canada.

The lack of understanding between the two communities, Schreiber adds, is compounded by the fact that Israeli behavioral patterns occasionally clash with those of Canadians. Schreiber concedes, that Israelis are generally outgoing in the extreme, but he vehemently denies that they are arrogant -- a charge usually leveled against Israelis by Canadians.

It is Schreiber's contention that a minority of expatriates, whom he disdainfully calls "rejects of Israeli society," are largely to blame for exacerbating the problem.

"The arrogant ones, the ones who had trouble in the army, the ones who think that Canada owes them something, the ones who want to make it right away, are mainly responsible for tarnishing our image," says Shreiber, a tall, swarthy army veteran and ex-sausage maker.

He adds: "The majority of Israelis are good citizens. They donate their time and money to Israel. They are deeply committed to Israel, and many of them may go back home one day."

Schreiber has a gut feeling that something ought to be done to improve the image of the average Israeli here. Although he finds it difficult to articulate a plan of action to remedy the situation, Schreiber is of the opinion that a club might be formed where Israelis and Canadians can meet and get to know each other on a personal, non-biased basis.

Schreiber and his South African wife, Kim, argue that face-to-face meetings bringing together Israeli and Canadian Jews are perhaps the best and only means of eradicating the myths and misapprehensions both groups sometimes have about each other.

As Schreiber puts it: "A lot of Canadians still have the misconceptions about us and why we are here. We should get together and talk. Maybe then they will see that we don't have horns."

Grand Order to hold service honoring Holocaust victims

By MOURA WOLPERT
Hamilton Correspondent

HAMILTON –

Hamilton's Grand Order of Israel annual memorial service honoring the six million dead of the Holocaust will be held Sunday, Sept. 22 at 11 a.m. at the G.O.I. cemetery on Snake Road, Waterdown.

Rabbi Morton Green of Adas Israel synagogue will be the guest speaker, the invocation will be delivered by Rabbi Bernard Baskin of Temple Anshe Sholom and Mayor Victor K. Copps will represent the city of Hamilton. Six members of the community will be asked to light candles in memory of the six million.

The G.O.I. maintain two cemeteries in the Hamilton area and a new memorial to the six million martyrs of the Holocaust, Warsaw Ghetto heroes and all resistance fighters against Nazism was dedicated in September, 1971.

The Hamilton lodge, which recently separated from the Toronto G.O.L., received its charter in 1908 and now has approximately 250 members. The noble master is Albert (Ab) Leon, first vice-master, Gideon Tankus and second vice-master, Les Wolfe.

Hadassah seeks to increase its membership to 18,000

TORONTO –

Hadassah-WIZO, the largest Canadian Jewish women's organization, has launched an intensive national campaign to increase its membership by 20%, from about 15,000 to 18,000.

The recent wars in Israel, like all wars, have hit the innocents the hardest," said Neri Bloomfield of Montreal, Hadassah-WIZO's president. "Our task is to help needy women and children. To do this, we bear a greater financial responsibility, and that means more members. At this crucial time we have no alternative but to seek out every person possible in support of our humanitarian projects."

The goal in Toronto is 1,000 new members. The co-ordinating chairman of the membership drive is Mrs. E. Bloch, assisted by Mrs. A. Rosenberg and Mrs. H. Saperia and their committees.

During the coming weeks, Hadassah-WIZO members will be placing posters, counter cards and brochure dispensers in a number of locations in the city.

"The Israel I saw this summer is not the Israel that I have known all my life," writes Yitzhak Rabi, a Sabra, who returned home this summer. Here, schoolchildren at play in border town are under guard. (SUN photo)

After war, Israel will never be the same again, for better or for worse, returning Sabra says

By YITZHAK RABI

Yitzhak Rabi, a sabra, returned to Israel this summer for a visit, and recounts his impressions of what Israel is currently experiencing.

NEW YORK (JTA) -

Almost a year after the Yom Kippur War, Israel seems, at first glance, to have recovered. Dizengoff Street -- the Champs Elysee of Tel Aviv -- is once again throbbing and vibrant as young people sipping coffee in the crowded sidewalk cafes, trade gossip, exchange smiles and jokes. Yet, despite this surface manifestation of everything - is - back - to - normal, there can be no mistake: Israel is different. Israel has changed and will not be the same again for better or worse. The Israel that I saw this summer is not the Israel that I have known all my life.

"Today I view life very differently. Nothing is the same for me, not even my face in the mirror." David, my youngest brother, was staring at the green-blue sea lapping languidly along the shore of Tel Aviv and telling me about the Yom Kippur War. Two years ago, when I last saw him, he was a boy. Now he was an adult. David is only 23 years old. His best friend, Eli, was killed on the second day of the war on the Golan Heights. Other friends of David became invalids for life. He himself faced death more than once in the fierce battles on the Sinai front.

While he was talking about the horrors of the war I realized that he had learned to appreciate life. In fact, he had learned to appreciate everything. But, by the same token he also learned to disregard everything. "Whatever happens now, happens. I do not care. I realized it does not help if you worry ..." David's voice trailed off.

These contradictory feelings -- appreciation and disregard -- can be traced in almost any Israeli who lived through the trauma of the last war and its aftermath. People are tired. True. But at the same time there is an eagerness to get the most out of life. With unprecedented inflation it seems that for many, (many, not all), money is no problem. Someone remarked jocularly that people do not like money: look how fast they get rid of it.

People scramble for bigger and better apartments; they buy huge TV sets and ostentatiously display them in their huge living rooms bedecked with new carpets purchased abroad. Almost everyone has a car or is striving to get one. Life is too short, and with a car one can save a lot of time.

Are they detached from reality? Are these the same people who only 10 months ago were faced with a threat to their very existence? It is all too perplexing and there are no easy ways to find answers to the preoccupation and the seemingly insatiable quest for material things. But after a while one suddenly realizes that this new cult of materialism and the pursuit of "the good, sweet life" is the inevitable escape from the trauma of the last war, from the knowledge that real, lasting peace is not yet at hand, and that this awful experience called war might be thrust upon them once again in the near future.

"I don't see how we can get out of the mess of the Middle East conflict. I have no illusions. I do not think anything will help, except, maybe, one thing: a miracle." The woman who made this observation was Ariana Haran, the famous Israeli poet from Kevuzat Schiller. After the Yom Kippur War, she mused, one has to believe in miracles to see the Arab-Israeli conflict resolved.

Meanwhile, until that miracle arrives, life continues. A new generation is born. The Yom Kippur War babies, as they are called by some, are already taking their first faltering steps. People, as after any other shattering experience, are much more tolerant and understanding. There is an openness to new ideas, not just on the political level but also on issues that involve the individual and his way of life and his relationships with other people. For example, the issue of women's liberation is no longer viewed as a problem imported surreptitiously from the United States. The role of women in Israeli society is now a valid issue, and judging by the Israeli press an issue that stirs a great many arguments and emotions.

Aids nation's ecology program

By Irwin Huberman

MONTREAL -

The ecology research of a young Jewish Montrealer has mediated a spirit of cooperation between the governments of Canada and the Central American country of El Salvador.

Meish Podlog, 26, recently returned from El Salvador where he spent a half year developing a program to combat an acute urban population problem.

Erosion of the soil due to volcanos and heavy river flow has forced many of El Salvador's peasants off their once fertile land. Heavy pressure has been placed on the few remaining areas of good land, as well as the cities where an increasingly large number of people are concentrated.

Podlog's group piloted a communications project designed to reverse the trend of migration towards the cities. The project will produce TV and radio programs, films and literature to teach the people of El Salvador to make more efficient use of their land.

The Canadian government, according to Podlog, will be giving large sums of money over the next five years to the El Salvador government for marine biology and ecological research.

Podlog said his group's stay in Central America provided the El Salvador government with a chance to see international exchange in action.

"If we had not gone to El Salvador," Podlog said, "it would have been harder for the governments to get together. It's a good story in international co-operation."

According to Podlog, many fertile areas in the country are used exclusively for growing coffee and cotton, therefore exhausting the land.

"In the meantime," he said, "there are hardly any animals left and the people are eating a diet of corn and beans. There is protein malnutrition in the country.

"There are 3.8 million people in an area 1/2 the size of Israel," Podlog added, "every 23 years the population doubles."

According to Podlog's wife Renata, who accompanied him on the trip, there is an extremely active Jewish community of about 80 families in this Central American country.

There is a rabbi and a synagogue in El Salvador, she said, and activities like Israeli singing and dancing are very popular.

El Salvador already boasts a highly developed communications system. When completed, Podlog's research will have the cooperation of El Salvador's existing five television and 32 radio stations.

"The people are fantastic in El Salvador," he said, "they have a great attitude towards life . . . they were helpful and beautiful."

Podlog said he is optimistic about the potential success of the project. "It is important for us to begin at the bottom," he explained, "to explain to the people how the problems came to be and then what solutions can be applied by the run of the mill man."

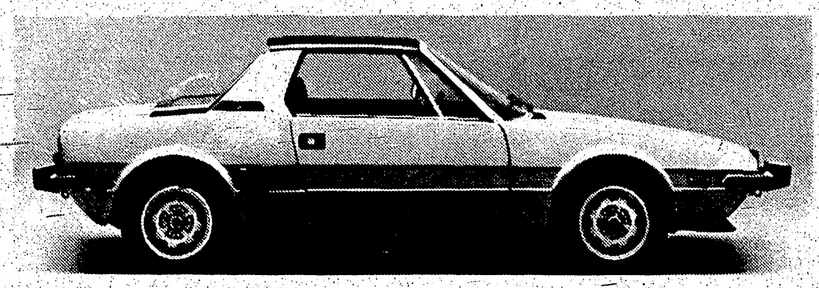
extends best wishes to all our friends for the NEW YEAR

IF YOU HAVEN'T BOUGHT A PORSCHE 914 YET, YOU'RE IN LUCK.

THE FIAT X1/9 IS HERE.



The Fiat X1/9 is in many ways remarkably similar to the Porsche 914.
Both are 4-cylinder, mid-engined cars.
Both cars have removable roofs.
Both have integral roll bars, pop-up headlights, 4-wheel independent suspension, and luggage compartments at both ends.
Both are truly tight-handling, high-performance sports cars.
Of course, there are differences between the cars.
But if you just bought the Porsche, there is one difference that should make you crazy: the Fiat X1/9 would have cost you less. A lot less.

Two indispensable books guide Jewish travellers

By JAMES MONTAGNES

TORONTO -

There are hundreds of guide books for world travellers, a dozen or so which are updated annually or every few years, but only two which have a special appeal to the Jewish traveller.

If, like this travel reporter, you want to visit synagogues as well as churches and religious museums in various parts of the world, you will find either of these two books indispensable. And if in addition you want to eat in only strictly kosher restaurants, you will need either of these books.

Oldest of the two books is The Jewish Travel Guide, published by the London Jewish Chronicle ($3.45 in Toronto). It is updated annually. (The 1974 edition is available at only a few bookstores, including the Negev Book Store and at Zucker's Books.)

This pocketsize book covers practically every country in the world, devotes most space to Great Britain, Israel and the United States, briefly deals with Jewish history in each country, and details location of major synagogues, community centres, Jewish organizations, kosher restaurants and butchers, where special food can be obtained in countries and cities which have no kosher dining spots. It even deals with how to arrange for kosher food on the world's principal airlines.

The 320-page book, edited by Sidney Lightman, has lists of vegetarian hotels, guest houses and restaurants throughout the world, lists Jewish holiday camps in Britain and continental Europe, and has many illustrations of synagogues in various countries, including such unexpected ones as the modern interior of the synagogue at Kobe, Japan. The book also lists under each country the Israeli Embassy or Consulate.

The Selective Guide for the Jewish Traveller, by Warren Freedman ($2.95) was published in 1972. It is also a pocketbook, is published in the United States -- (Collier Books). This 396-page book gives more general history of each country in addition to Jewish history, and gives a considerable amount of sightseeing information of general interest. It is not nearly as fullsome with data on where to eat for religious travellers.

Author Freedman describes in detail many of the ancient synagogues in Europe, such as that at Dubrovnik in Yugoslavia, and the Portuguese Synagogue at Amsterdam. This guide also lists the Israeli, Canadian and American Embassies in each country.

In his chapter on Mexico he deals most interestingly with the lot of Marranos and their descendants since the conquest of Mexico.

Thousands celebrate bar mitzvahs at Wall

JERUSALEM -

For thousands of Israeli youngsters the most meaningful place to celebrate bar mitzvah is at the Western Wall. Every Monday and Thursday dozens of the youngsters accompanied by friends, relatives and proud parents gather around the four widely spaced "bimot" to participate in the Reading of the Law and to celebrate thereby their attainment of the bar mitzvah age of 13.

Since 1967, when the Western Wall became a part of a united Jerusalem, the area before the Wall has become the largest open air synagogue in the world, attracting hundreds of thousands of people on the major religious festivals. But, it is on those weekday mornings that the clusters of celebrating families make it the world's most popular location for bar mitzvah.

In recent years, many young Jews from overseas have been coming here to celebrate bar mitzvah. In the United States the World Zionist Organization through its education and culture department and Eastours, a large New York travel agency which deals through retail travel agencies throughout the United States, offer special tours and programs for Americans traveling to Israel for bar mitzvah.

The WZO program can be obtained by writing 515 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022. The Eastours address is 1140 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y. 10036.

Hotels transform life of Tel Aviv

TEL AVIV -

New hotels have been rising on the Tel Aviv skyline giving the shore area a completely new personality and transforming the economy of the city of Tel Aviv.

A wave of hotel construction that began shortly after the Six Day War is nearing completion here and new hotels are being topped off and completed at a rapid rate. The result for the visitor to Israel is that he can obtain high quality accommodation at a reasonable cost.

The concentration of hotels has also led to a concentration of facilities aimed at benefiting the tourists. Always a shoppers delight, the area along Yarkon Street is now almost totally awash with high quality shops, including outstanding boutiques having furs and the famous Israeli knits.

One complete centre for tourists has been set up on the empty land between the newly completed Plaza Hotel and the Hilton.

General Motors welcomes back Al Shelman.

Al Shelman brings over 30 years of automotive experience to Shelman Chevrolet Limited—downtown Toronto's new, exclusive Chevrolet dealership. Over the years, Al Shelman's been an active part of General Motors' dealer organization...and now that he's back...General Motors couldn't be happier.

Along with Al is a qualified nine-man management team: John Marwood (General Sales Manager), Ron Randles (Secretary-Treasurer), Johan Mogensen (Service Manager), Doug Horses (Parts Manager), John "Derrick" Heasty (Used Car Manager), Bert Green (Assistant Used Car Manager), Horold Lesy (Fleet & Leasing Manager), Jim Aitken (Truck Manager) and Fred Gemaro (Body Shop Manager).

There is also a full staff of knowledgeable people who will help make dealing with Shelman Chevrolet a satisfying experience.

At Shelman Chevrolet, they deal exclusively in Chevrolet cars and trucks—from the economical Vega to the luxurious Caprice, as well as a wide selection of OK used cars and trucks. They have a daily rental department and a leasing department for new Chevrolet cars and trucks.

For maintenance, there are 40 bays staffed by qualified technicians who use the newest and most modern service equipment available.

You'll enjoy dealing with Shelman Chevrolet, conveniently located on approximately 5 acres of property in downtown Toronto. There's air-conditioned comfort and ample free parking.

Drive over or use the customer shuttle service which runs every 30 minutes from Queen and Bay Streets.

Shelman Chevrolet Limited, 215 Lakeshore Boulevard East, at Sherbourne Street. Phone 862-0600.

Al Shelman, President

No reason to despair

Need more awareness of history, sense of perception

By Rabbi Bernard Baskin

The problems of our society are complex and multiple, but there is no reason for despair. What we need is a sense of perspective and a greater awareness of history.

Five hundred years ago, man's world was limited in size and largely unexplored. It lay flat under a mysterious heaven, surrounded by unknown seas. Two hundred years ago, a man could travel no faster than a horse could carry him; the limits of his power were a yoke of oxen or a crude water wheel. A century ago man was still setting out to sea in wooden ships.

Today man walks on the moon. He is beginning to explore the stars. He has the ability to watch and talk with his brothers in all corners of the globe. He has doubled his life span. He has broken open the infinitesimal atom and taken hold of its incalculable power. The very secret of life lies within his grasp.

When you listen to the pessimists, the prophets of doom and preachers of destruction, their basic fears usually fall into three categories: 1. There are too many people in the world; we are beginning to choke on our own population. 2. Pollution and the depletion of our natural resources must lead to our destruction. 3. There is an unprecedented upsurge of crime and violence.

Let's take a quick look at each of these concerns. 1. Many demographers take present-day population trends and extend them far into the future. They come up with an astonishing, frightening total of human beings. Fortunately however, an increase in population is not inevitable. People are not breeding machines. Modern history has shown that, when underdeveloped countries become industrialized, when they become urban and technological, the birthrate begins to fall. Undoubtedly this will be the future pattern in most of those countries with the highest birthrates. Growing population is a real concern but should not be the basis for panic or wild extrapolation which does not take into account human ingenuity and creative concern.

2. Pollution is a valid fear. We should be worried about the quality of the air we breathe, the water we drink, and of the destructive nature of insecticides, herbicides, etc. However, people are living twice as long as they lived a century ago.

Sewage in our rivers and streams must be halted, but remember that until relatively recently, garbage and wastes of all kinds were dumped into the streets of large cities.

Smallpox is a disease of poor sanitation. Perhaps nothing else on earth has caused so much human anguish. Half of all children born in Shakespeare's England died of smallpox. The only place on earth where it still exists to any extent is a portion of India. However, the United Nations World Health Organization expects that smallpox will be eradicated there and throughout the entire world by 1976.

In 1348, the Black Plague appeared in Europe. In two years it had killed between 1/4 and 1/2 of the entire population. In 1666 it carried off 1/2 the population of London. It ended when London was burned down in the Great Fire that destroyed the town, the plague, and the manure piles. Plague is carried by filth. It is caught from fleas that live on rats that live on the filth. We have gotten rid of plague because he have gotten rid of filth. And so with cholera and many other of the scourges that used to threaten mankind.

Yes, there are ecological problems in our time. We must be vilant. But by any standard of evaluation, neither the quality of life nor of our environment is deteriorating.

3. We've seen and heard much about the increase in crime and violence. Perhaps the main reason for our alarm is that we are living in a time when we know more about more crimes than ever before. We are present, vicariously but excitingly, at the commission of crimes. We pick up the morning newspaper and stare at a picture of someone who has just been shot. We turn on the TV set just in time to take part in a riot. Between us and the violence there is no more than a reporter's pad. A hundred years ago crimes were just as dreadful, and more widespread. But if we heard about them at all, the news spread so slowly that the effect was reduced.

On this continent we have a tradition of rebellion and a history of expansion into unsettled areas where there were no laws. It has been only a short time in the American West since every man wore a gun openly.

Man has not only survived, but gradually is beginning to construct a world where most people obey the laws, carry on the world's commerce, find their pleasures, and satisfy their ambitions in ways that do not violate the rules of the community. It may be a long haul but the human race is inching forward towards a more peaceful society founded on law.

Foreign export network needed for entertainers to culturally cement Israel to the Diaspora

music

By RICK KARDONNE

Anybody who reads either one of the two New York Jewish weeklies will soon notice in the advertising sections the existence of a breed of Israeli entertainer who has been around for quite some time now -- the sabra who is permanently resident in the Diaspora and who constantly performs Israeli-type material for audiences on this side of the ocean. Examples include Jo Amar, Chana Aroni and Aliza Kashi; in Europe, there is Estella Ofarim. The attitude of Israelis resident in Israel towards these entertainers is mixed; some regard them as golden calf worshippers who have deserted Israel where they really belong, while others cannot blame these entertainers for wishing to not confine themselves to the Israeli market which can be highly competitive simply because it is so small.

Several other facts are worth mentioning within this context. It is true that sabra entertainers first came to New York in considerable numbers during the 1966 Israel depression, and that today, due to the high inflation in Israel, a few more sabra entertainers have indefinitely prolonged their North American concert tours. All of them retain passionate loyalty to Israel; none of them have tried to assimilate into the North American mainstream and none of them have been able to do so.

Yet the fact also remains that none of Israel's really top pop entertainers (such as Chava Alberstein, Sassi Keshet or Yeroam Gaon) have chosen to follow this path: that the more established singers, such as Yaffa Yarkoni, Geula Gill and Shoshanna Damari, enjoy the best of both worlds (resident in Israel, participating in the life of Israel yet going on yearly North American concert tours); and that the Israeli singers resident in North America do not enjoy wide recognition, even among the Jewish population, but draw their audiences either from the 180,000 sabras resident in North America or from close-knit religious circles who so far have not reached out to the Jewish body politic.

While these Israeli entertainers have done a worthwhile job in supplying an authentic Israeli musical presence in New York and a few other large cities, for which they must be given much credit, some of the contemporary music of Israel today is much more original, eclectic and exciting. The sabras resident in New York, for the most part, tend to follow both Israeli and American music trends rather than to innovate.

What is really urgently needed is for there to be a much more comprehensive foreign export network of as much entertainment from Israel to the Diaspora as is feasible so that very few Israeli entertainers will feel that North America is the only place where they can live in order to make the big money which, given the size of the total world Jewish population as a market they deserve. Especially now, such an export network is vitally necessary to culturally cement the Diaspora to Israel at a time in which we are truly isolated and can rely on nobody but ourselves. The presence of a vibrant entertainment industry centred in Tel Aviv and directed and distributed towards all of the Jews in the world will raise Jewish morale everywhere and is of utmost necessity to all of us.

Major budget planning step

In early October, a session chaired by Morley Globerman of Winnipeg, will discuss the budget of JIAS. The Montreal social services fund provides finances for the JIAS budget, and the organization is hoping that the financial responsibilities will be more evenly shared.

According to Bronfman, JIAS and UJRA are national bodies which Montreal has been "overfunding in proportion."

Bronfman does not expect to enter the discussions with overnight results, but he feels confident that a better arrangement will be achieved through "a process of negotiating."

In November, the steering committee will meet and review the budgets and sessions which will be taking place soon.

According to a brief, NBC recommendations will seek to minimize and eliminate overlapping or duplicating programs or the inefficient application of communal funds for approved programs."

An important point stressed, however, is that each member is free to take their own action as regards programing, and the NBC will not intervene between fund-raising and fund-receiving organizations.

According to a draft report, NBC membership is voluntary, and NBC recommendations are only advisory in nature.

"The NBC is designed as a help to, not as a substitute for sound budgeting in each constituent member."

Special exams allowed

By HELEN TUCKER

MONTREAL -

Dental aptitude tests for Sabbath observers wishing to enter dentistry will take place for the first time this year on Sundays at Hillel House.

Orthodox students in Toronto have been writing their entrance examinations on a Sunday since 1972 -- and this year, Montreal's observant dental applicants will be able to enjoy the same privilege.

Rabbi Irwin E. Witty, Director of the Board of Jewish Education in Toronto, and Miss Barbara Nicholl, administrator of the tests, were instrumental in making a Sunday testing centre available.

Miss Nicholl first contacted Rabbi Witty in 1972, asking whether the Board of Jewish Education in Toronto would be prepared to administer entrance testing on a Sunday, and she solicited his co-operation in helping to set up a testing centre.

"It is interesting to note," says Rabbi Witty, "since this centre has been established, we have been approached by several other departments from various universities, requesting assistance in making separate tests centres available to Jewish students when an official exam is scheduled on a Jewish holiday.

"For example, the Board of Opthalmic Dispensers is this year moving their official exam which falls on Saturday, Oct. 19, to another date, and will be administered separately by the Board of Jewish Education in Toronto.

"We are indebted to Miss Nicholl, administrator of dental aptitude testing who took the initiative to get these centres started."

Last year in Toronto, a group of Seventh Day Adventists and Chinese students were included in the assembly of Orthodox candidates writing their aptitude tests for entry into Dentistry.

Robert Weiss, program director of Hillel House said: "We are quite prepared to make whatever provisions deemed necessary for the successful completion of any necessary arrangements. In fact, we're old hands at it.

"This is a clear cut deal -- very often we have to house and feed the students until an exam is over, and the coast is clear for them to mingle with the rest of the student body writing the same exam ... the following day."
